Start Small with New Year's Resolutions

Several weeks ago I was having a conversation with my sister on the phone and be-twice sharing our Christmas lists and talking about our lives, we somehow ended up talking about the flawed nature of New Year's resolutions.

We decided that no matter what, the resolutions we make as the ball drops are futile and doomed from the start.

New Year's resolutions can express the desire to stop smoking, lose weight, or become more organized for the coming school year.

No matter what they want to fix you can tell a lot about a person from what their resolutions are.

If their resolution involves participation in more physical activity, it is easy to assume they are lazy and just don't like to get off the couch. However, this is not the end of the story. In addition to their confession of laziness, your friend also has expressed a desire to make a change in their life. It's not necessarily an issue of what they want to change, it still shows they are trying to improve their quality of living.

No matter how excited someone is about their resolutions, the sad reality of the vows is they are doomed to fail. When is the last time you actually achieved the goal you set as the ball dropped? The problem is not the people making the resolutions but the resolutions people make. Typically, the established goals are unrealistic and generally cannot be accomplished overnight.

Look at the facts. If your resolution is to go to the gym and you're not going at all, chances are good you're not going to start going just because your emotions got the best of you one night.

If you are tired of the feeling you get when you realize you again failed to achieve your goal, the solution is here. Start small and set a resolution that you know you can keep.

After 24 years of resolution missteps, my older sister finally got the right idea this year with her pledge. She doesn't want to run a marathon or lose twenty pounds; she simply wants to memorize the words to Billy Joel's hit song "We Didn't Start the Fire."

You might read that and scoff at her lack of drive or motivation, but look at it from another angle.

After she can finally recite the words and perform at karaoke night, the satisfaction from achieving her goal will be a welcomed change from the earlier feelings of regret and remorse. I can see her breathing easier as the chains that once prevented her from achieving her dreams fall away and there is no more weight on her shoulders.

More importantly, she will have the added confidence to take an even bigger step when the sparkling wine is popped next year. She will know that she has the ability to achieve her dreams.

The moral of the story is to start small and work your way up. It isn't too late to set some pre-year goals, so if you start in 2008, you will be able to climb Mount Everest in the year 2068. Good Luck.

Students share personal experiences to earn grades, battle procrastination

It's time to return to class, see old friends, make new ones and spend hours upon hours studying — or perhaps not.

To help students stay focused and avoid the pitfalls of mid-night cramming sessions, here are ten tips to help achieve good grades this semester.

CORENE BRISENDINE

TREAT YOUR BRAIN

The brain is a muscle, even though most people don't think of it as one. Your body produces specific measurable enzymes when you are tired, dehydrated, or malnourished. Studying gives your cranial muscle quite a workout and, it needs plenty of rest. Getting eight hours of sleep every night helps maintain your cognitive thinking powerhouse and prepares it for another day of exercise.

You also need to feed your brain. Breakfast jump-starts your metabolism and awakens those synaptic pathways first thing in the morning. A bowl of cereal makes an inexpensive, quick meal anytime, but don't forget about it early in the morning.

ORGANIZING NOTES

Most students take notes during lectures, but they neglect to re-copy or organize them later. By taking a few minutes after class to organize your notes, it will help you understand what you have written, and you might also remember a few important points you missed while frantically scribbling. When you review them for the exam, your notes will be a useful study guide, not incoherent hen scratches on paper.

Making or using flash cards is a great way to study formulas, important dates, names and events. You can purchase flashcards for foreign language, history, philosophy, medical terminology, math and many other subjects.

Online, Waldenbooks.com offers the largest selection with more than 3,000 different types of flashcards. Flashcardexchange.com offers flashcards created by other people and tools to create your own online.

Don't limit your flashcard library to just what you can purchase — make your own. Index cards are inexpensive and while you organize those notes, write the key points, names, dates and events on an index card.

Another great way to gather information during a lecture is to record it, but always get your professor's permission before recording any lecture. Recording the lecture makes it easier to make those flashcards because you can pause or rewind it to catch every detail.

EXERCISE

While exercising your brain, don't forget to exercise your body. Exercising increases blood flow to your brain and maintains your cardiovascular system. Increased blood flow means increased oxygen to your brain and allows you to study more without getting tired. Performing a cardiovascular workout — like walking, running or cycling — for 15 to 30 minutes every day gives your mind and body the ability to handle the stress of college life.

While working out, instead of listening to music, throw on that recorded lecture or notes you dictated to keep you studying without staring at a book.

IMPROVING STUDY HABITS

Study groups provide a way not only to visit with friends but also to gather information you might have missed. If you didn't understand some portion of the lecture, perhaps one of your fellow students did.

If you are unable to find a study group or organize one, tutoring is a great option. The Academic Assistance Center in 201 Leisure Hall provides free tutoring to all K-State students. The Educational Supportive Services, located at 201 Holton Hall, also provides free tutoring to qualifying applicants. You can also ask your professors for tutors within their departments.

Study for short periods of time. Study one subject for 15 to 20 minutes, and then switch subjects.

Once you complete your studying tools, organized notes, flashcards, dictation tapes, spend time every day studying each subject. While eating, review your notes. While watching an episode of your favorite nightly show, mute those an-

Kristina Schoen, a sophomore in modern languages, said she studies right before bed. She said she has no other distractions before sleep, which gives her brain the time needed to process the information she learned that day.

Garett Roop, a doctor at Aligned Roop Chiropractic in Manhattan said: "While spending hours hunched over a desk trying to retain all the information, make sure you spend time working on posture. Stand up straight every half hour, roll your shoulders back and stretch all your neck muscles. This will help relieve the stress in your neck and shoulders and help prevent tension headaches."

Everyone learns in three ways: by listening, by reading and by doing. By incorporating all three into your studying habits, you increase your learning immensely. Good luck this semester and remember: study wiser, not harder.

Procrastination is a common battle in my life that has only gotten worse since I entered my last year of college.

"College people are busy with jobs, classes and other responsibilities. Find a balance. Graduation is the ultimate goal," said Rachael Robinson-Keiling, counseling services psychology intern.

"Procrastination feeds on itself until it becomes the big elephant in the room," she said. "Use time management and map out your semester and time. Look at pre-planning."

She said procrastination is not just about laziness. Some people fear not doing well, or they think they will never get to the end so they don't start. In my personal case, I want things to be perfect but I don't know where to start.

Drew Dobbeleare, senior in park management and conservation, said he procrastinates on an everyday basis out of habit and perfectionism.

"I don't know how to get an assignment started so I wait for hours on end and then get it done," he said. "If an assignment is due in a week or so I'll wait until the day before to do it. More interesting stuff pops up and I do that and eventually get around to getting everything done. I hate to admit it, but there was one assignment I didn't get done because of procrastination."

To avoid procrastination this semester, Dobbeleare said if he has a month to do an assignment he is going to do it within the first two weeks and then have free time.

My advice on avoiding procrastination is to join a study group or get a tutor. This makes you accountable for your work. Write a to-do list — but keep it short and simple. I write long lists and then feel overwhelmed.

"Long lists seem insurmountable and make you think, 'Why am I going to even start?' Focus on a small part of the list not the whole thing," Robinson-Keiling said.

Whitney Stotts, sophomore in social science and international studies, said she procrastinates if she has significant time before an assignment or task is due. Stotts said the main reason she procrastinates is because of other priorities.

"I think there is more important things like friends," she said. "You only live so long so you have to take those moments."

To stay on top of her schoolwork she said: "I get into the habit in the beginning and then I can slack more at the end of the semester. I just get it done or split it up throughout the week."

In Overcoming Procrastination by Neil Fiore, he explains guilt-free play will lead to quality work. In the book, Fiore said workaholics and procrastinators need to stop putting off life and reap in the benefits of play.

"Guilt-free play is based on the seeming paradox that in order to do productive, high-quality work on important projects, you must stop putting off living and engage wholeheartedly in recreation and relaxation," according to Fiore's book.

To have guilt-free play, he suggests that you work for short periods of time and give yourself rewards more frequently.

Fiore explains how to overcome procrastination by using what he calls the unschedule: a weekly calendar of planned exercise, chores, sleep, meals, classes, appointments and other important events. This unschedule allows you to realize the small amount of time you have to actually work on projects, so you will start earlier.

K-State Proud continues campaign to help students

By Nicole Johnston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Proud campaign is back for the second round of inspiring students, hoping to leave their legacy at K-State and show their pride through philanthropy.

"Each day on campus, you are likely to come across at least one student wearing a black T-shirt bearing the words K-State Proud," said Molly Hamm, student foundation member and senior in English. "Yet, in the past year this shirt has done much more than announce wildcat pride."

Though many students purchased the shirts for the home basketball game against the University of Kansas last season, Hamm said the shirt has more meaning.

All donations for the Proud campaign fund the Student Opportunity Awards. The inaugural campaign raised more than $62,000, creating two types of awards: K-State Hero awards and K-State Proud awards.

"This year, K-State Proud is back, but not in black," Hamm said. "The K-State Proud student campaign saw the overwhelming response of students interested in helping students and is continuing in its second year to raise funds for Student Opportunity Awards."

The 2008 co-chairs Megan Dwyer, junior in history, and Cole Galyon, junior in business administration, are leading a campus advisory board of 30 student leaders, along with members of Student Foundation, to plan this year's student campaign.

"K-State Proud is a way for our campus community to come together and raise funds for our fellow students through Student Opportunity Awards," Dwyer said. "All contributions are improving, and will continue to improve, the lives of many K-State students. When you see a K-State Proud shirt on campus, you know that person believes in the K-State family."

During the week of Feb. 18-22, students can make donations to K-State Proud in the K-State Student Union. Minimum donations of $10 will qualify students for a gift - a charcoal grey T-shirt with a new logo.

Hamm said the 2008 campaign will culminate at Bramlage Coliseum during the K-State, University of Texas men's basketball game Feb. 25.

One hundred percent of all donations to the student campaign fund the Student Opportunity Awards. Student Opportunity Awards can help any K-State student in an unexpected situation that could potentially Willie the Wildcat and members of the student foundation talk with students about making donations to the K-State Proud campaign.

Awards are distributed in two categories:

K-State Hero Awards recognize students who have shown an outstanding commitment to K-State through campus leadership, community service or other areas of student life.

K-State Proud Awards are allocated by a student allocations committee to help students who are struggling to make ends meet and have exhausted all other forms of financial assistance. Students can nominate themselves for an award, or they can nominate a fellow student. Faculty members are encouraged to nominate deserving students. K-State Proud awards have no application deadline; awards are made year-round. Visit www.found.ksu.edu/studentfoundation to apply.

Variety of intersession courses offer different perspectives, lessons

Lt. Kenneth Landwehr presented graphic photographs from the BTK case in Wichita. Images and accounts of serial murderers glazed the overhead screen for two weeks straight.

Small groups of classmates read several voluminous biographies of men and women who killed tens and hundreds of people. They wrote 10-page papers about the books and gave presentations to their peers.

During my winter break in 2006-07, I opted to not spend my days lounging in front of the television and sleeping. Instead, I experienced the most intense two weeks of my academic life in Social Construction of Serial Murder.

Some students might think attending four-hour classes and studying during a break sounds like an academic nightmare more than an opportunity. All courses listed in the K-

State catalog are fair game for intersession, according to K-State's Division of Continuing Education Web site.

However, intersession is a time at K-State when only certain courses are offered. Classes like A History of American Sex and Body Image; Forensic Medicine and the Investigation of Death; and Understanding Islam were offered during the January intersession, which ends today.

Many of my Social Construction of Serial Murder classmates were not sociology or criminology majors. In fact, during a pop quiz about characteristics of a serial murderer on the first day of class, only one student got a perfect score - and he was an engineering major.

During a two-week period, my academically diverse classmates talked about reasons they decided to take a class during winter break. For some, they only needed one more class to graduate. But for others, sociology and serial murder were topics that fascinated them. Intersession provided a perfect opportunity to learn more about the subject.

We lived, breathed and ate theories and anecdotes about serial murder. Each class period presented itself with a different experience.

Susan Williams, associate professor of sociology and Social Construction of Serial Murder instructor, once told my classmates and I that we would learn more about ourselves during the class than about the actual serial murderers.

"The course is really about the killers themselves and also about us as a culture - us as a society," Williams said in a Dec.

22 K-State Media Relations and Marketing press release.

"I cannot teach anybody anything," the Greek philosopher Socrates once said. "I can only make them think."

K-State's intersession challenges its students to do the same: learn an immense amount of knowledge in a shortened semester, but more importantly, think for themselves.

Online listings receive positive feedback from students, Varney's

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The university's official bookstore's online textbook listing went well during its first full semester in operation, said one bookstore manager.

"We didn't have anybody complain about it, and I think the students like to have the information at their fingertips," said Steve Levin, K-State Student Union Bookstore manager. "It's hard to say sales-wise what we did. We were slightly down, but we think that might have had more about the parking than anything."

Since 2001, Varney's has leased its locations in the K-State Student Union and Aggieville to K-State, making it the university's official bookstore, according to an April 20, 2007, Collegian article.

VARNEY'S ONLINE TEXTBOOK LISTING

K-State faculty members were asked to report their spring semester textbook information by Oct. 12, 2007, Levin said.

"You have good years and bad years," Levin said. "This would be probably one of the slower reporting seasons that we've had."

"We always want to be able to have the information from the professors as soon as we can. That's always our goal. But as far as posting it, we always try to have the most accurate information on the site as we can."

The textbook lists are available through www.ks-subookstore.com and www.shopvarneys.com. Textbook titles, authors, International Standard Book Numbers and book editions are provided through listings of academic departments, section numbers and specific K-State instructors.

"When we put stuff into our internal systems, we just put it on our Web site, so it's really not a complex thing," Levin said about the online posting process. "It's just trying to verify that what we have is correct."

Varney's and the Union Bookstore employ a 30-person textbook staff. Ten people actively accumulate and verify textbook information with K-State faculty members, as well as order the books and provide the lists online, Levin said.

Three information technology specialists also help with Varney's Web sites, Levin said.

Varney's spends about $200,000 a year in developing its book lists, according to an Aug. 18, 2007, Collegian article.

Cost factors include employee salaries, computer software and follow-up with K-State faculty, said Jeff Levin, Varney's co-owner, in the Aug. 18 article.

Jeff Levin also said in the article that the new textbook listing's cost is minimal because the bookstore already has its distance-learning book lists online.

CLAFLIN BOOKS AND COPIES

Claflin Books and Copies, an independently owned bookstore on Claflin Road, also provides textbooks for K-State students.

Stormy Kennedy, Claflin Books and Copies co-owner, said the store has provided textbooks for about eight years and works with the College of Arts and Sciences academic departments and the School of Family Studies and Human Services.

Unlike Varney's and the Union Bookstore, Claflin Books and Copies does not have a specific textbook deadline for faculty members.

"There is no deadline because we know that sometimes things get shifted around in the department and that sometimes they might have emergencies," Kennedy said.

Claflin Books does not employ a separate textbook support staff, Kennedy said. She also said the bookstore does not have an online textbook listing and does not plan to include one in the near future.

"We're going to keep it mostly in store and in large part it's because we want the students to come in and get to know us," she said.

TEXTBOOK COSTS

Publishers calculate Varney's textbook prices, Steve Levin said.

"The book is priced by the publisher, and we can price it lower, which we do," he said.

Textbooks found at lower prices on the Internet usually are older edition books, Levin said.

"We might have books that we no longer use on this campus, and we can sell them to wholesalers for maybe $10, so we'll post them on the Internet for sale for $15 because we'll make more money," Levin said, "and then students at other universities will buy them from us. That's really how students are finding deals is that most of the books are from bookstores selling books they can't sell on their own campus."

At Claflin Books, Kennedy said vendors and publishers also set the bookstore's textbook prices.

"On the buyback, if the professor is going to be using the textbook the following semester then we can offer more than what the used book vendors offer," Kennedy said.

"Otherwise, we work with three used textbook vendors, and we try to give the highest price of the three vendors. It means a little bit more paperwork for us, but if we can give a dollar more back, that's what we'll do."

Students should inform faculty members during the semester if they do not use an access code or CD that came with a textbook, Levin said.

He said this helps ensure used textbook buyback because the CDs and codes weren't used.

"The code really doesn't do anything," Levin said. "The code really is a way for the publisher to ensure that we'll have to buy new books again because the book really is perfectly fine; it's just you can't use it again without the code."

A STUDENT-LED EFFORT

During the mid-fall semester, Student Senate members sent an e-mail through the Office of the Provost to faculty members informing them of the textbook deadline, said Matt Wagner, student body president and fifth-year student in management information systems. Student Senate members also communicate with Faculty Senate about students' textbook needs.

Student Senate members will facilitate a discussion with students and Varney's officials at the beginning of the spring semester about textbooks, Wagner said.

While an official date has not been set for the discussion, it will take place in the Union Courtyard.

Student Governing Association

leaders organized the effort for online textbook listing during the 2006-07 Student Senate term.

Senate members referred a resolution supporting the proposal back to the University Relations Committee with a vote of 26-18-0 at the Feb. 22, 2007, Senate meeting.

At their March 1, 2007, meeting, University Relations Committee members changed their original proposal to increase accountability for professors, increase the buy-back cycle at Varney's and lower textbook prices for students in the long run, according to a March 2, 2007, Collegian article.

Student Senate members then passed the initial resolution in support of the online textbook listing at their March 8, 2007, meeting with a vote of 41-4-3.

Wagner and Student Body Vice President Lydia Peele included an online textbook listing in the academic accountability platform of their campaign.

"We fulfilled our promise in that area," Wagner said. "We pushed the bookstore to post that information online, and I think that we accomplished that goal. That doesn't mean we are going to give up on the textbook issue."

Steve Levin, K-State Student Union Bookstore manager, said buying textbooks is generally an auction with no regulations.

"It's basically buyer beware," Levin said. "We had a student last year who bought $400 worth of books and they got a box of bricks. And there's no recourse. You're stuck with what you have. There's some good deals, but you could also lose a lot of money out there."

The parking garage, which is located south of the K-State Student Union, is scheduled to be completed this December and will open in January 2009.

Parking garage construction on schedule

By Michlynn Rose
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The semblance of a parking garage is starting to take form south of the K-State Student Union after several months of construction.

"The garage construction is moving right along," said Gary Leitnaker, assistant vice president of human resources and parking. "You will see a difference. They are constructing columns that will support the first deck. Next month, the ground level concrete should be poured and it will start taking shape."

As for the icy weather during finals week, Leitnaker said the contractors have built-in weather days, and he said they are close to being on schedule. The garage should be completed this December and open to drivers in January 2009.

Because of the loss of the parking spaces in front of the Union, four shuttles have been busing students to and from the Union and Peters Recreation Complex. The shuttles spend 10 minutes at each location waiting on passengers before making its commute.

"The shuttles were very well received and utilized," Leitnaker said. "Seven hundred and fifty people a day have been riding the shuttles."

These students ride the shuttles for classes, work or visiting someone on campus.

"I ride the shuttle pretty much every day," Seth Gordon, senior in finance, said. "If I have to go to school later or to the library I park on a side street."

He said sometimes the shuttle caused problems because he had an 8:05 a.m. class and the shuttle did not start until later in the day. Krystin Matuszewicz, sophomore in biology, said she shares the same frustration. She was sometimes late to class because of the inconsistency of when shuttles come and go, because of the traffic level on campus.

Matuszewicz said she rides the shuttle three days a week and finds it convenient because she works in the Union.

"Some shuttle drivers make conversation and make your day a little better," she said. "They interact with the students taking their minds off everything else."

Leitnaker said anyone can ride the shuttles but to park on K-State property, a valid parking permit is required. Students can purchase a permit for the spring semester for $65 in Edwards Hall. A schedule of shuttle departure times is available on the K-State Parking Services Web site at www.ksu.edu/parking.

Students urge others to look beyond bars for love

By Michlynn Rose
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two partying singles make eye contact across the bar and find themselves wandering over to introduce themselves, immediately making a connection. The following morning they wake up with no clue as to who the other one is, wondering what happened the night before.

There are alternatives to finding a date like this in Aggieville or at parties.

When searching for that special someone worthy of a trip home to meet the parents, look in honor groups, clubs, work or church, said Erica Winter, K-State alumna and newlywed.

Erica said she met her husband, Zach Winter, K-State alumnus, in the honor group Phi Eta Sigma. She said they first were introduced at the annual Up 'Til Dawn philanthropy event, but she didn't even remember his name. However, Erica was invited to a barbecue at his house where they connected. They started out as friends attending Bible study and club events together and the rest, Erica said, is history.

Maria Mai, sophomore in elementary education, said students should look for a date in their major, classes, residence hall or job. Mai met her fiancé, Bud Laude, senior in art education, while working at Derby Dining Center and they now have been together for seven months.

"Get to know them first before you jump into a relationship," Mai said. "I think that helps."

Where students look for a date also depends on what type of relationship they are interested in, Erica said.

"You shouldn't really look for a date; when you stop looking and have faith, God will bring someone into your life when you are ready," she said. "But if you just want someone to hang out with, it depends on what kind of person you are looking for. If it is wild and crazy, go to the bars."

Jonathan Frazzell, senior in English, said he has met dates at the bars in Aggieville.

"I don't always expect to find a girl — but it happens," he said.

Frazzell also said it is possible to meet people at the bars to share long-term relationships with.

"Just about everybody goes to the bars, so you're going to meet any kind of person."

Winter also said she dated someone she met at the bars in Aggieville. They dated for a little more than a month, she said, and though they were physically attracted, they were not mentally compatible.

Online dating is another way to meet partners outside of Aggieville, but Winter, Mai and Frazzell said they prefer alternative methods of finding relationships.

"I have friends who do online dating," Erica said. "They have found people, but none are married. I think it's creepy, but it depends on your personality and if you believe in it."

The important thing to remember, Winter said, is that if students are unhappy and lonely with their lives, relationships are not the best fix.

"Remember girls: girlfriends always come before boys," she said.

Zach's advice to girls is not to smother their dates. Guys need time to spend with buddies and play video games.

Erica also said it is important to keep in mind the image of what students want their match to be.

"Just remember when you are out looking for a date," she said, "Do what is in your personality."

Buddies program gives students chance to connect internationally

By Katie Starzec
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There is a new way to get involved on campus that gives students the chance to learn a new language, experience a foreign culture, open their minds to new ideas and make friends at the same time.

K-State's International Buddies program pairs international students with more traditional students. The pairs meet once a week to eat lunch, go bowling, attend a sporting event or do whatever interests them. Though the main focus of the program is to have fun, there also is an educational purpose.

International students can increase their knowledge of the English language by communicating regularly with their local buddy while domestic students can learn about life in a different culture.

The program began in fall 2007 and membership is constantly increasing, said Claire Hemmendinger, senior in hotel and restaurant management and co-leader of International Buddies with Holly Campbell.

"I decided to lead the program because I saw the interest from domestic students to meet international students, and I wanted to help the international students with their transition to Manhattan and K-State," Hemmendinger said.

She said there are about 370 people enrolled at this time. Those 370 people are not only students.

"It's a community-wide program," Hemmendinger said. "We even pair international students' spouses with people of the same age in the community."

International Buddies is a free program; the only requirements are that members spend one hour per week with their buddy and commit to one semester of membership. There is no age limit, and people can be paired even if they know only one language.

Jan Bayer, a student from Czech Republic majoring in mechanical engineering, said he joined International Buddies to get to know Americans, make friends and simply for curiosity's sake. Bayer said he has been in this kind of program before and finding activities both people enjoy can be tough, but he said he believes International Buddies is a great idea nonetheless.

Adam Tank, a Kansas native and sophomore in microbiology and pre-med, said the decision to join was a no-brainer.

He said he thinks this is a good opportunity for students to expand their horizons.

"I would like to hopefully make a life-long friend, and I want to learn some of the culture so I don't embarrass myself this summer," Tank said.

He is traveling to Mexico this summer, and said he would like to brush up on his Spanish.

During the sign-up process, students can indicate if they would like to be paired with someone who speaks a specific language, and whether they would like a male or female buddy. People are matched based on their age, interests and preferences, said Hemmendinger.

She said the pairing process could take as little as two days, depending on how many people are waiting to be paired. People can sign up for more than one buddy.

To sign up or to learn more about International Buddies, visit www.k-state.edu/oip/buddies/.

Campus groups help students find similar interests outside of classes

By Carly Hannon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Joining a club on campus could be an easy solution for students tired of trying to socialize in classes or crowded bars.

K-State has 428 registered organizations covering a variety of interests.

Whether you want to meet people who enjoy playing dodge ball or are interested in finding friends with similar faith, K-State campus organizations exist to turn college into a memorable experience.

For Megan Leonard, senior in bakery science and management, joining the Bakery Science Club initially was a way to meet upperclassmen and be involved with something outside of class pertaining to her major.

She is now president of the BSC and will represent K-State at the American Society of Baker's Convention in Chicago.

"Being part of this club, I have gained a lot of experience on equipment, more knowledge about baking and how to prioritize between club and homework," Leonard said. "I've been able to network with people that are in the industry as well."

She said she has made lifelong friends through the BSC and also has enjoyed tasty benefits.

The BSC club meets every Tuesday night in Shellenberger Hall Baking Lab where they spend all night baking products for the following week's bake sale which takes place on Wednesdays from 3-5 p.m.

Sean Jones, vice president of the Snow Ski and Snowboard club and senior in electric engineering, said he also liked the idea of joining an organization when he first started college.

"At the time, I didn't know very many other people who had skied before, so I wanted to meet others similar to myself," Jones said.

Since his freshman year, Sean has traveled with the Snow Ski and Snowboard club to Breckenridge, Crested Butte, Aspen/Snowmass and Telluride, along with thousands of other college students from all over the country.

Jones said after each day on the slopes, club members spent the night relaxing in million-dollar condos.

He also said the club tries to make it possible for smaller trips by getting discount lift tickets.

"For those that think the club is for advanced skiers and boarders, that is definitely not the case. The majority of our members are fairly new to skiing and snowboarding and are interested in just having the opportunity to try something new," Jones said.

If there still isn't a group that fits an interest or hobby, students can start their own, said Bill Harlan, assistant coordinator for student activities and services.

He said registered organizations need at least five student members - with at least 50 percent of total membership being students - a full time faculty or staff person to serve as the advisor of the group, a completed registration form and a constitution for the organization.

All groups must attend a registration meeting and have a one-on-one meeting with a staff member to finish the process.

It usually takes one week to get a club started, Harlan said.

"I think the best part about being involved in a club is making contact with other students and staff at K-State," Harlan said. "Your college experience can be pretty impersonal if all you do is attend class. Getting involved in organizations lets you have the chance to meet people outside of the classroom who have similar interests as you."

Student known for his resolve

By Ryne Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lucas Short didn't have to come back to school after being paralyzed from the chest down in 2006, but he was not one to give up.

Short

So he returned to K-State during the fall 2007 semester. He was trying to live a normal life again, but before the junior in electronic engineering could start this 2008 spring semester, he died on Jan. 10 from lung complications.

The 21-year-old's chronic lung problems were from a diving accident at Tuttle Creek Lake that left him with the spinal-cord injury in September 2006.

Short skipped the 2006 school year before coming back. His return sent a message to people who knew him.

"His message was to never give up," said Ruth Miller, his adviser and professor within the Department of Electrical and Computer Engineering. "He wasn't going to wait."

Short was determined to accomplish his goals, said Brett Beier, Short's fellow Phi Kappa Theta fraternity member. "He was one of the most determined individuals that I know."

Possible currency collection found

By Owen Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Police Department discovered a large amount of collectible coins and paper currency Jan. 4, which might have been stolen from a private collection.

RCPD Capt. Tim Hegarty said the currency was found in a building in central Manhattan but declined to comment on how much it was worth. He said he did not want to say what kinds of coins were in the collection, because if a person is missing such a collection, they already would know what is in it.

"They should be able to identify what was in and what the collection was comprised of," Hegarty said. "The container it was in and the way it was stored leads us to believe it was someone's collection."

Police do not know if the coins and paper currency were stolen from the location at which they were found, or if they were even stolen in Manhattan, Hegarty said.

There have been no burglary reports matching the property found earlier this year, and Hegarty said there were no arrests in connection to the recovery.

"If it was a result of a burglary, we don't have any suspects," he said.

Anyone with information regarding the recovered property should contact the RCPD at 785-537-2112.

After the storm

City to clean up debris for next several weeks

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The city began the long process of cleaning up the debris from the recent ice storm that took out electricity, downed trees and caused chaos during fall semester's finals week and winter break.

Jeff Walters, Public Works Superintendent, said all went well the first day of clean-up. The city of Manhattan started picking up limbs and brush on the northeast side of town. They estimate the clean-up will take four to six weeks barring any further interruptions by the weather.

The only problem Walters perceives is not gathering all the debris because people might not know when or where the city workers will be during the clean-up. He said the residents need to make sure they stay abreast of the pickup. The city Web site, www.ci.manhattan.ks.us, will have daily updates on where the crews will be and where they plan to be the following day.

Residents and businesses unwilling to wait, or who missed the city pickup, can take limbs and brush to the Riley County Transfer Station located at 1881 Henton Road. The Transfer Station is open from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Saturday. Residents can deposit brush and limbs free of charge, but businesses normally pay $3 per ton. Gary Rosewicz, assistant county engineer, said the fee for businesses will be suspended until Jan. 31 in support of the clean-up.

Rosewicz also said business has increased noticeably but not as much as they had anticipated. They receive between 100 to 200 loads per day and expect that to remain the same through spring when people begin preparing for the growing season.

Hollywood actor's father a leading professor, researcher at K-State

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Google search of James Marsden reveals an actor who appeared in recent movies like "Hairspray," "Enchanted" and "27 Dresses."

But add "Kansas State University" to the search and a biography of Regents Distinguished Professor of animal sciences comes up.

James Marsden, father of the actor, came to K-State in December 1994 with 100 percent research appointment. The Regents professorship is the most prestigious of all academic appointments in the Kansas Regents' system of universities and colleges.

A MOVIE-STAR SON

Marsden said he remembers the first time he knew his son would become a movie star. At age 16, the future actor James Marsden and his family took a vacation to Hawaii. The boy introduced himself to "Full House" cast members, who were filming an episode of the TV show.

"I went down to the pool one day to get him, and he was laying on a lounge chair, and he had his sunglasses and was twirling them," Marsden said about his son. "He had this total circle of young girls around him in his chair, just hanging on every word he had to say. I knew he had something then."

Marsden said he enjoys attending his son's Hollywood movie premieres and has attended almost every premiere. He also said he is impressed at his son's versatility in acting roles.

"His range surprises me sometimes, and I like to see that," Marsden said. "It's more fun to see him on the big screen than it is on the television just simply because it's a big screen — there he is."

MEAT-SAFETY EXPERT

Marsden, who specializes in meat safety, came to K-State for specific research with E. coli. He said he immediately got involved with research projects related to pasteurization technologies that would minimize the risk of the E. coli pathogen.

"We have developed so many technologies now that are being used by the industry," he said. "Steam pasteurization of carcasses was validated here at K-State. Steam cleaning carcasses with a little hand-held steam-cleaning device was developed here. Technologies that rely on ultraviolet light for decontaminating the surface of meat products — that was developed here. A whole list of technologies were either developed or validated here at the university over the past 15 years."

Before Marsden's K-State appointment in 1994, most food-safety research used surrogate organisms, he said.

"The work wasn't really done with the real pathogens," Marsden said. "It was done with bacteria that aren't harmful but behave similarly to the pathogen. We changed all of that here; we worked right from the start."

K-State researchers went into biocontainment-type laboratories and pilot plants where they inoculated meat with harmful bacteria. The experiments and research increased the understanding of pathogens and their control, he said.

"Really, up until that point, most of the consumer groups who were very powerful in food safety were opposed to most food-safety

City funds additional downtown developments

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An ordinance to amend a Manhattan marketplace was approved by city commissioners Tuesday night. The ordinance will allow Dial Realty to develop the area north of Osage Street, west of Tuttle Creek Boulevard, south of Moro Street and east of North Fourth Street, according to the agenda. The ordinance passed 3-2. Commissioners Bob Strawn and James Sherow were opposed. Commissioners also unanimously authorized an agreement with Dial Realty to build future residential units in the same area. Twenty million dollars will be issued to Dial Realty in revenue bonds to acquire the land in the South Project area. Strawn said he was concerned the city would not gain some of the franchises Dial Realty was promising. Dial realty partner Richard Kiolbasa told commissioners that a Hilton Garden Inn would be one of the franchises constructed in the South Project area. Strawn used the inn as an example. "There's nothing in this agreement that says we're going to get a Hilton Garden Inn," Strawn said.

Assistant City Manager Jason Hilgers said Dial Realty has to own the project area before a specific franchise can be secured, which is why no franchise was guaranteed. He also told the commissioners the agreement is very strict about building materials and the quality of the developments. After a lengthy period of questioning, the ordinance passed unanimously. A real estate contract between the city and Dial Realty was approved unanimously to help Dial Realty purchase the remaining properties in the south redevelopment area.

Large amount of tickets left for Will Ferrell performance

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Several hundred tickets remain for Will Ferrell's Feb. 4 performance at K-State. Ben Hopper, Union Program Council program adviser, said available seats remain at Bramlage Coliseum in all three sections - floor seats, the first 10 rows and bench seating. "There are several really good seats available based on the tech writer," Hopper said. "We had certain sections held not knowing where certain tech equipment would be. So now that we have that information from the tour manager, we have certain seats that are really good seats." Student tickets are $30, $35 and $40, and public tickets are $35, $50 and $55. People can purchase up to four tickets, but K-State students must present a K-State ID at the performance, Hopper said. Tickets can be purchased at www.kstatesports.com or by calling the K-State Athletics Ticket Office at 800-221-CATS or 785-532-7606 between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. UPC members negotiated with Ferrell's agent for more than three months and secured a contract in early December for his performance. K-State is Ferrell's first stop on his nationwide college comedy tour that promotes his film "Semi-Pro," which has a Feb. 29 theatrical release date. "Not only will this tour make people laugh, but it's going to change lives ... I think," Ferrell said in a Dec. 6, 2007, Business Wire press release. Ferrell's comedy tour also will feature comedians Zach Galifianakis, Demetri Martin and Nick Swardson. For more information about "Will Ferrell's Funny or Die Comedy Tour Presented by Semi-Pro" visit UPC's Web site at www.ksu.edu/upc.

Chinese ambassador to the United States to present first Landon Lecture of semester

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Chinese Ambassador to the United States will speak at 2:30 p.m. Feb. 11 in McCain Auditorium as part of K-State's renowned Landon Lecture Series. H. E. Zhou Wenzhong, who has served as ambassador to the U.S. since 2005, was scheduled to speak on Oct. 10, 2007, but was postponed at the ambassador's request. Charles Reagan, chairman of the Landon Lecture Series and associate to President Jon Wefald, said few lecturers have rescheduled their lecture in the history of the series, so he does not expect the ambassador to reschedule again. Reagan also said the ambassador's lecture will be valuable to all students. He said China is one of the fastest growing nations in the world and has a significant effect on the United States. "I don't know the contents of the speech, but it's important for students to see the lecture and ask questions first-hand," Reagan said. Ambassador Zhou will be the third ambassador to the United States to speak in the series since 2005. Saudi Arabia ambassador Prince Turki al-Faisal spoke Jan. 26, 2007, and Japanese ambassador Ryozyo Kato spoke Oct. 18, 2005. "It's a sign of how international the series is," Reagan said. "We don't just look in the United States; we look all over the world for political leaders." The lecture is free and open to the public. Though there will be no seating arrangements for the large number of Chinese students at K-State, Reagan said the students will have a chance to meet the ambassador at a breakfast that morning.

Asking for ID

Requiring voters to show identification not a burden

Christina Forsberg | COLLEGIAN

In the first major case before the Supreme Court concerning voting since Bush v. Gore, Democrats and the American Civil Liberties Union are fighting tooth and nail against an Indiana law requiring voters to present a state or federal ID to cast their ballot. Oral arguments for this case began Jan. 9.

A posting on the Democratic Party Web site declared opposition to the law based on its ability to disenfranchise "real voters — seniors, students, veterans, minorities and low-income families."

Chairman of the Democratic Party, Howard Dean, was quoted in the posting as saying, "Undemocratic voter ID laws are just another part of a broad Republican effort to undermine our fundamental right to vote ... We will not let Republicans steal another election."

Always quick to shoot off his mouth without the facts, Dean should re-examine the results from the 2006 Election in the state of Indiana. While the law was in effect, according to voting results posted on CNN.com, three incumbent Republicans lost their congressional seats, which gave Democrats five of nine House seats. If losing elections is considered stealing, Republicans need to take a few notes from late Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago on the proper way.

The Indiana law was designed to prevent voter fraud during elections. According to the Public Education Initiative concerning the new ID requirement, written by Indiana Secretary of State Todd Rokita, published Oct. 13, 2005, the goal of this law was "to improve the integrity of Indiana elections."

In the time leading up to the May 2006

Primary Election, the state was to make the public aware of the new law through "a combination of mass marketing, direct marketing, in-person training and strategic partnerships."

BRETT KING

The state of Indiana's message was clear: "Go (to) the polls; bring photo ID; vote with confidence." Somehow these simple instructions — which are in no way a burden to the American voter, caused attorney Paul Smith — representing the challengers, to say during oral arguments as reported by USA Today on Jan. 9, "This is the most strict law in the country."

As reported by USA Today, During oral arguments Indiana Solicitor General Thomas Fisher said, "I think it's also terribly significant that we don't have anybody in front of this court ... who's injured by this law."

The Indiana League of Woman Voters had one woman parading around for opposition to the Indiana ID law, but according to the Fort Wayne Daily News, on Jan. 9, Faye Buis-Ewing was dropped by the ILWV in their cause. Ewing claimed to be a 50-year resident of Indiana, even though she and her husband spend winters at their own property in Florida.

In the days before oral arguments, it was discovered Ewing had become a registered voter in Florida on Sept. 18, 2002. Daily News stated, Ewing "signed an oath that she was a Florida resident and understood that falsifying the voter application was a third-degree felony punishable by prison and a fine up to $5,000."

Being registered to vote in Indiana and Florida makes Ewing a potential felon.

A decision in this case will be rendered by the Supreme Court during the summer months, which will affect all citizens of the United States; however, let's be realistic.

Citizens of this country are asked to present ID every day across the country. We are asked when we use a credit card, purchase alcohol or tobacco, when pulled over by the police or even applying for a job. Asking for an ID is not a burden. Asking voters to pay a poll tax disenfranchises them — asking for an ID does not.

TO THE POINT

Residents should help to clean up winter weather debris

Manhattan is still digging itself out of the debris from the ice storm that almost paralyzed the city late last year.

When students returned to Manhattan from their holiday break, many limbs and pieces of debris were here to greet them.

The city of Manhattan and the cleaning crews are doing everything they can to clean up the city, but they need the help of Manhattan residents and students.

If limbs are still in nearby yards, help out by moving the debris to the curb so the crews do not have to go into individual yards to gather every limb. If students have a fireplace, they should keep some of the larger limbs for firewood.

After the ice storm, the weather warmed up for a couple days, but it looks like winter moved back to Manhattan along with everyone else. As the weather worsens, the city's capabilities will slow, especially with poor road conditions and low temperatures.

Residents and students should let the season of giving extend to this month by volunteering to help out with the clean-up. The crews do not have enough staff to clean up at the desired rate, and this will continue as the weather gets colder.

These efforts will take time and will require help from all concerned Manhattan residents. The debris will not disappear on its own, and it is time to get Manhattan back to the way it was before the storm.

Anyone interested in volunteering should call the city at 785-587-4588.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Here it is: my last first column of my last semester at K-State. Thousands have been in my place — like my mother and my aunts and uncles — and thousands will come after me — like my cousins and my brother. But when a person is about to graduate, it is hard to think their experience is anything but their own. What I have learned during my seven semesters at K-State will stay with me forever. Some of the things I have learned I wanted to pass on to those who still have time to spend here. Hopefully you can learn from my experiences as you create your own.

First, thou shalt not buy books at Varney's until shopping online first. Admittedly, Varney's has stepped up to the plate and provided a book list for most classes on their Web site, but look around on Web sites like Amazon.com and Half.com before buying books at Varney's.

You are now responsible for your own finances, and this means you must make the best choices with your money. From textbooks to loans, money no longer comes down to the allowance your mother gave you every week.

This brings me to my second tip: thou shalt not go overboard on student loans. Just because loans are offered to you by the Office of Student Financial Assistance doesn't mean you have to take them. Get a part-time job to pay for living expenses. It's more important to be better off than to "live the life" while in college.

Third, being a poor college student is an experience everyone needs to live through, but being an overexposed college student isn't something you should do: thou shalt not have discriminating pictures of thyself on Facebook.com and the rest of the Internet.

This means when you are looking for your first full-time job, employers could search on Facebook and Google.com to see what you have been up to. Sure, that time you passed out on the bathroom floor in stilettos might be funny the next day, but it won't be funny to someone who is thinking about hiring you for a job. Google yourself. See what you can find, and do what is possible to make the best digital impression you can.

Memories and what you do with your life make you into the person you are, which brings me to my fourth and final point: thou shalt not forget about your childhood friends. It is a fact of life that people grow up and go their separate ways. However, the girl who sat by you the first day of third grade knows who you really are. She was there when your parents got divorced and when your heart was broken for the first time. Being bound together by childhood makes some of the strongest friendships ever forged. Keep in touch with the people who have kept you laughing your entire life. That way, you will never forget the person you always were.

There are so many other stories I could tell and lessons I could teach about my time spent at K-State. It might sound corny, but one of the most important parts of college that shaped me into who I will be when I graduate was the ability to make my own mistakes. So go, college student. Go and make mistakes and create your own future.

FROM THE EDITOR

Campus coverage, multimedia to be top priorities for spring

At the beginning of my Collegian career, it didn't seem very likely that I'd wind up one day being the editor-in-chief.

I didn't exactly shoot up the ranks of the Collegian staff right away. Our staff had a surplus of sports writers covering most of the high-profile sports – I was assigned to cover women's tennis for two semesters.

However, I didn't mind. I took the opportunity very seriously. I went to practice every week, watched as many as 10 hours of K-State women's tennis matches per week, and I even dressed up – if you consider wearing a polo shirt dressing up.

The point is, I took it seriously. I might not have known much about women's tennis in the beginning, but I wanted to do everything possible to absorb as much information about the sport as I could because that was my job. I did more than the bare minimum. I went the extra mile.

Now that I am the editor-in-chief, I plan to do the same thing. I realize the difficulty of this job, but I know that working hard won't be a problem.

I have already filled positions with the paper as sports editor during spring 2007 and managing editor during fall 2007. One thing I learned was that the Collegian has a way of sucking you in, and in some cases, taking over your life. For my sanity's sake, I realize there will be times when I need to pull myself away from the Collegian to catch my breath and clear my head.

If there are times that I need to take a break for a few hours, I feel confident that the staff I've assembled will be more than capable of running the newsroom without me. One quality that I know they all possess is the ability to do a little extra when it's needed.

This semester, we plan to continue to provide students with as much K-State coverage as possible. If there's anything important happening on our campus, we want to be the first to cover it.

We would also like to continue improving our Web site and our multimedia coverage. We hope to have more blogs, videos and breaking news to post on kstatecollegian.com.

However, we are always looking for suggestions from our readers. Since we are the students' newspaper, we want to provide the best coverage for our students. If you ever have a story idea, letter to the editor or just a random thought, come talk to my staff and me in Kedzie 116.

19 GAZANS, ECUADOR-EAN KIBBUTZ VOLUNTEER KILLED IN ISRAELI-PALESTINIAN CLASHES

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip – Israeli troops killed a son of Gaza's most powerful leader along with 18 other Palestinians on Tuesday in the bloodiest day of fighting in the coastal area since Hamas militants seized control last summer.

As fighting raged in Gaza, a Hamas sniper shot and killed an Ecuadorian volunteer working in the potato fields of an Israeli border farm. That killing, and Tuesday's high death toll, stoked the flames of violence at a time when Israel and Palestinian moderates are making halting attempts to talk peace.

Tuesday's bloodshed began before dawn when Israeli infantry, tanks and helicopters pushed into northern Gaza in what the military said was a routine operation aimed at Palestinian militants who launch rocket barrages at Israeli towns near Gaza almost every day.

Three Palestinian civilians were killed in the ensuing fighting, along with 14 armed militants – one of them Hussam Zahar, 24, the son of hard-line Hamas leader Mahmoud Zahar. The Israeli soldiers pulled out Tuesday with no casualties.

WORLD NEWS

FORMER CONGRESSMAN CHARGED IN CONSPIRACY INVOLVING TERROR FUND-RAISING RING

WASHINGTON – A former congressman and delegate to the United Nations was indicted Wednesday on charges of working for an alleged terrorist fundraising ring that sent more than $130,000 to an al-Qaida supporter who has threatened U.S. and international troops in Afghanistan.

Mark Deli Siljander, a Michigan Republican when he was in the House, was charged with money laundering, conspiracy and obstructing justice for allegedly lying about being hired to lobby senators on behalf of an Islamic charity that authorities said was secretly sending funds to terrorists.

The 42-count indictment, unsealed in U.S. District Court in Kansas City, Mo., accuses the Islamic American Relief Agency of paying Siljander $50,000 for the lobbying – money that turned out to be stolen from the U.S. Agency for International Development.

FEMALE SUICIDE BOMBER KILLS 9 SHIITE WORSHIPERS IN IRAQ'S DIYALA PROVINCE

BAGHDAD – A female suicide bomber struck black-clad worshippers preparing for Shiite Islam's holiest day, killing at least nine Wednesday in an attack that highlighted insurgents' widening array of tactics against a U.S.-led offensive in key areas on Baghdad's doorstep.

A witness said people shouted slogans against al-Qaida in Iraq as they carried the dead and wounded from the blast scene near a marketplace in Diyala province – a region of farmland and palm groves northeast of Baghdad that holds strategic havens for extremists.

The blast in Khan Bani Saad, a Shiite village 15 miles northeast of Baghdad, was the fourth suicide attack by a woman in Iraq in three months. All have taken place in Diyala.

K-State makes headlines over break

Remember when Bob Huggins was the head coach of the K-State men's basketball team?

O K, maybe that's not the best way to start this column, but maybe it's worth pointing out that Huggins and his West Virginia Mountaineers are neck-and-neck with K-State with a record of 12-4 and are coming off their biggest home victory over Syracuse in 32 years.

Meanwhile, the Cats reached a similar height by shaking a five-game losing streak to Oklahoma. K-State might not have Huggins any longer, but so far Michael Beasley has been a great consolation prize. Frank Martin is having a good year, and it's K-State who generally is receiving the most national attention.

The Beasley-led Wildcats have been making headlines throughout the winter break. From playing in the new Sprint Center to losing in a rout to Xavier, the stories continued.

Even while students were enjoying a long break, K-State-related sports stories kept popping up all over as teams continued their seasons.

Just a few days ago, Beasley appeared on ESPN2 taking part in a segment on the show "First Take." Even country singer Toby Keith had to see Beasley as he sat court-side last weekend in the Cats' win over Oklahoma.

The women's basketball team has been the talk of K-State sports recently after knocking off two-straight ranked opponents during a road trip in Texas.

The first win over Texas A&M ended the Aggies' 26-home-game winning streak. The Aggies were ranked No. 12 in the nation when the Wildcats beat them.

Next, K-State knocked off No. 15 Texas in overtime. It was the first time the Cats defeated back-to-back ranked teams on the road since the 1979 season.

The worst news for the K-State women came after a Jan. 2 win over Western Illinois when freshman forward Jackie Stanley announced she would be leaving the program because of differences with the coaching staff.

Both basketball teams are on pace to make a run at the NCAA postseason.

Basketball was not the only sport making the news during the break, as K-State alumnus Darren Sproles made headlines in leading the San Diego Chargers over the Indianapolis Colts and to the AFC Championship game.

Sproles caught a screen pass and turned the play into a 56-yard touchdown while LaDainian Tomlinson was on the sideline.

Keeping on the subject of football, K-State has a new offensive coordinator after James Franklin left for Maryland.

Wide receivers coach Dave Brock will take over the position after coaching Jordy Nelson through an All-America season. This year was Brock's first season at K-State after coaching at North Carolina.

The track-and-field team also participated in three events during the break, including a trip to Arkansas for the Arkansas Invitational.

Highlighting that event was sophomore pole vaulter Alexandra Gonzalez who became the third Wildcat to reach 13 feet jumping 13-02.25 feet. Gonzalez came away with fifth in the competition.

With all the headlines K-State made in the sports world throughout the break, it should be a busy spring for Wildcat fans because the seasons have just begun.

Cats beat Tech, extend streak to six games

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State let the three-pointers fly early and often against the Texas Tech Red Raiders Wednesday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

It was the early points from those three-point baskets that helped the Wildcats extend their winning streak to six games with a 71-45 victory.

K-State opened the game with back-to-back threes from Kimberly Dietz and Ashley Sweat to go ahead 6-4 with 17:28 left in the first half.

Dietz and Danielle Zanotti knocked in consecutive three-point baskets with just over eight minutes to play in the half to push the K-State lead to 25-11. The Wildcats finished the first half 5-of-12 from the three-point arc.

Texas Tech responded with a 7-2 lead late in the half, but then the Wildcats defense took over keeping the Red Raiders from scoring again in the 3:29 left.

An additional key for K-State in the first half was offensive rebounding where they grabbed seven boards. Lehning led the way in the half with four offensive rebounds, and K-State finished the game with 14.

"I think it was important for us in this game to assert that we were going to defend post play and rebound well," K-State coach Deb Patterson said. "I felt we held our own against a very talented offensive rebounding team."

The Wildcats opened up their lead again in the second half with a 9-2 run spanning just under seven minutes of play that put them ahead 47-26.

Dietz hit another three with 6:17 left in the half to give K-State a 57-35 lead before Texas Tech scored five straight to cut the lead to 17 points.

K-State put the Red Raiders away with consecutive three-pointers from Kelsey Nelson and Kelsey Hill. The Wildcats finished the game shooting 9-for-26 from behind the three-point line.

Sweat and Dietz led the way in the scoring category for K-State each finishing with 17 points.

Men go 5-1 over break, win first Big 12 game against Oklahoma

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The men's basketball team flourished over the winter break, posting a 5-1 record and netting its first Big 12 Conference victory over Oklahoma on Jan. 12.

FLORIDA A&M

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — All 11 players on the active K-State roster scored in an 87-60 victory over Florida A&M at the Sprint Center on Dec. 17.

Though the victory looked solid for the Wildcats, Coach Frank Martin said he thought the team came out and played lethargically.

"We're a better basketball team than Florida A&M," he said. "We were bad in practice this week, and we played bad. We could sit around and say ice storm, finals ... all those are excuses. I'm not interested in excuses."

WINSTON-SALEM

Forty points. That was Michael Beasley's contribution in a 90-48 victory over Winston Salem on Dec. 22. Beasley almost outscored the other team by himself.

He became only the ninth player in K-State history to score 40 and also posted his 11th double-double of the season.

"Mike's a tremendous talent," senior guard Clint Stewart said. "He told me at halftime that he was going to get 30 this half. I look at him and said, 'OK, you've gotten 30 in a couple games but not in a half.' He said, 'I'm going to get 30 this half. Watch.' He went out there, and he was motivated."

WAGNER

K-State put up scores in the triple digits Dec. 29 to push past Wagner 101-59.

Beasley, who had 21 points and 10 rebounds, led the team in scoring. Freshman guard Ron Anderson had a career-high in points, scoring 14 points and also pulling down six boards. In his first appearance in a Wildcat uniform, freshman guard Dominique Sutton scored 10 points and grabbed four rebounds.

"Dominique (Sutton) is a good defensive player, and he is going to bring his A-game every time we practice or out on the court. He goes hard every game," Stewart said.

XAVIER

K-State's four-game winning streak was snapped Dec. 31 by an upstart Xavier team that is making a push for the NCAA Tournament.

Xavier had seven players in double figures, including Derrick Brown, who had 14 points and 12 rebounds, and guard Drew Lavender, who had 21 points. Xavier won 103-77.

Shining for K-State was Bill Walker, who had a career-high 31 points and freshman guard Fred Brown, who put up 25 points.

SAVANNAH STATE

K-State bounced back in a big way from the loss to Xavier, showing no mercy in an 85-25 rout against Savannah State Jan. 7.

During the game, K-State set several records. The 25 points scored by Savannah State was the lowest ever scored in Bramlage Coliseum. Savannah State only scored four points in the second half, which was also a Bramlage record. Savannah State also set the NCAA record for the lowest field-goal percentage in a half (they only shot 4.3 percent in the second half).

OKLAHOMA

NORMAN, Okla. — A K-State team that played well beyond its years sealed a victory with less than three seconds left to stun Oklahoma on Jan. 12, 84-82.

Michael Beasley simply drove through the lane and put up a lay-up with 2.3 seconds left.

After the game, Beasley said the play that came out was not the play originally set up.

"It didn't happen exactly like it was supposed to, but (freshman guard) Jacob Pullen was able to play like a point guard and make a play, and it worked out for the best," he said. "Jacob's ability to pull my man toward him was just gorgeous. It was the perfect play."

K-State's record improved to 11-4 and 1-0 in the Big 12. It was the first time K-State has won in Norman since Jan. 20, 1996.

K-State had a season-high field-goal percentage, shooting 56.4 percent from the floor.

Michael Beasley had his sixth 30-point game, putting up 32 points. The K-State player record for 30-point games in a season is seven.

State lottery hires consultant to review casino contracts

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Kansas Lottery Commission took another step Wednesday toward making resort casinos a reality when it hired a consultant to help write and negotiate contracts with the 13 applicants to manage the four facilities.

The commission unanimously agreed to hire Richard Schuetz, of Laguna Beach, Calif., and to pay him $90,000 for the first 90 days. His fee could be up to $120,000 if he works an additional 60 days.

"We really don't have a background in casino-type gambling. To do it right, we wanted to get a consultant on board with that background, and Mr. Schuetz will fill the bill," said Ed Van Petten, the Kansas Lottery's executive director.

Schuetz has three decades of experience in the gambling industry, including top positions at five casinos in Las Vegas and one in Minneapolis. He has been a visiting professor at the University of Nevada, Reno, and the University of Houston, and holds graduate degrees in economics and finance.

"I have been around the business a lot and will be a good conduit with people who haven't had the experience. I think they just want some experienced hands on their side," said Schuetz, who started out dealing blackjack in Reno while in college.

Van Petten said Schuetz will help the Kansas Lottery evaluate the contracts and help negotiate them. He said that will include checking on the viability of an applicant's business plan and finances and background information on them.

The Lottery has until the end of March to complete negotiations with the 13 applicants, although Gov. Kathleen Sebelius could extend the deadline. Van Petten said he thinks the negotiations can be completed without asking for more time.

It can reach agreements on as many contracts as it wants and forward them to the Lottery Gaming Facility Review Board, which makes the final selection of casino developers in each zone.

Last year, Sebelius signed legislation allowing for a casino in Wyandotte, Cherokee, Sumner and Ford counties, plus slots at the Woodlands in Kansas City and Camptown Greyhound Park in Frontenac. The state already has four tribal casinos in northeast Kansas.

The local government where the casino would be located must give its approval before a contract is signed with the state. Five applicants are in the process of getting that local approval.

Van Petten said negotiations are continuing with the tracks. Earlier this month, a contract dispute between his agency and Camptown halted renovations at the track.

"We've got a dialogue going, and we hope to finish up soon. We're talking to everybody," Van Petten said.

He said the tracks probably will operate slots by this summer — 600 at Camptown and 800 at the Woodlands, although the Lottery could increase numbers.

Eleven states have nontribal resort casinos, but Kansas would be the first to have state-owned and operated ones. The Lottery would own the gambling and contract with operators to run the facilities.

Even as the Lottery moves forward, the issue of whether the expanded gambling law is constitutional remains uncertain. A lawsuit filed by the attorney general's office argues it isn't and the issue is in Shawnee County District Court. Ultimately, it will be decided by the Kansas Supreme Court.

Sebelius said the law is constitutional but asked for the legal challenge to get a definitive answer from the Supreme Court.

Court case could alter Nev. primary outcome

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS — A last-minute federal court battle over caucus rules demonstrates just how important a tight three-way Democratic presidential contest in Nevada has become in the battle for momentum headed into Super Tuesday's votes.

Hillary Rodham Clinton, Barack Obama and John Edwards are in a statistical dead heat in polling here before Saturday's caucuses. Nevada's sizable blocs of Hispanic, union and urban voters could provide an indicator of where the race is headed on Feb. 5 when hundreds of delegates will be awarded in states with significant minority populations.

By contrast, Republican candidates have stayed away from the diverse electorate and unfamiliar electoral landscape as Nevada voters weigh in earlier than ever before.

No major GOP candidate has set foot in the state for two months, and some Republicans are bracing for a possible surprise first-place showing by long-shot Texas Rep. Ron Paul, the only Republican to broadcast TV ads in Nevada.

At issue in a federal court hearing Thursday is whether Democratic caucuses will be held in nine casinos along the Las Vegas Strip. The special locations were designed to make it easier for housekeepers, waitresses and bellhops in the state's biggest industry to caucus at midday near their jobs rather than returning home to neighborhood precincts.

The rules were unanimously approved by the state Democratic party last March and ratified by the Democratic National Committee in August.

But last Friday, six Democrats and a teachers union, which has ties to the Clinton campaign, sued to shut the sites on grounds they allocate too many delegates to one group. Of roughly 10,000 delegates to Nevada's presidential nominating convention, more than 700 could be selected at casino caucuses, depending upon turnout, which could make them more valuable than some sparsely populated Nevada counties, the lawsuit said. Four plaintiffs are on the committee that approved the sites.

The DNC petitioned to join the suit on behalf of the state party Tuesday.

The Clinton campaign has denied any involvement in the lawsuit, but Obama noted it was filed two days after he was endorsed by the powerful Culinary Workers Union Local 226, which has organized many workers along the Strip. The union is the state's largest with 60,000 members, more than 40 percent Hispanic.

The Illinois senator drew cheers at a Culinary Union event Sunday when he said the rules were fine until the union decided, "I'm going to support the guy who's standing with the working people instead of the big shots."

By Monday, Bill Clinton was defending the lawsuit. "I think the rules ought to be the same for everybody," the former president told high school students near Las Vegas.

The Culinary Union circulated a less subtle message on fliers to members: "Backers of Hillary Clinton are suing in court to take away our right to vote in the caucus." It's airing the same message in Spanish-language radio ads.

The legal dustup is not the only sign that stakes have risen here as a new survey this week by the Reno Gazette-Journal showed the race is a toss-up among the three main rivals.

Democratic campaign offices are packed with field workers from Iowa and New Hampshire. An Obama phone bank has been expanded into a trailer. New Clinton staffers are wearing name tags. The Edwards campaign tripled its staff.

First to arrive after New Hampshire, Clinton went straight to a heavily Culinary Union neighborhood and found several members willing to break with the union to support her.

The fight over labor has dominated the campaign partly because its proven organizing ability is one of the few tested elements in the contest.

Party officials are hoping 40,000 people turn out, 10 percent of the state's registered Democrats. Four years ago, a record 9,000 turned out.

Clinton has the support of the Democratic establishment thanks to her state chairman, Clark County Commission Chairman Rory Reid, Sen. Harry Reid's son. The New York senator lined up the boldface names in each demographic group, particularly among Hispanics, who are nearly 25 percent of the population. She went after regular party activists, women and hordes of retirees with time to work the phones.

Edwards locked down some early union support, but the former North Carolina senator wrestled hard and lost when he needed it most. Along with the Culinary Union, the Nevada chapter of the Service Employees International Union aligned with Obama. The Edwards campaign has focused on a badly needed win in South Carolina and did not rush to match the stepped-up Obama and Clinton efforts.

Before his labor endorsements, Obama's campaign was fueled by new voters, blacks and scores of out-of-state canvassers from California and Arizona. His workers reached out to the massive work force on the Las Vegas Strip in casino employee breakrooms and cafeterias.

Obama has tripled his TV advertising and added a new commercial about his union endorsements. Clinton's ads have highlighted her promise to close the proposed nuclear waste dump at Yucca Mountain, but all three candidates vied at a debate Tuesday to express the deepest opposition to the dump.

Campus offers resources for fulfilling resolutions

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Amanda Mosteller wants to lead a "more fabulous life" in 2008 through drinking more water, living a healthier lifestyle and becoming a positive change in the world.

Mosteller, fifth-year student in history and women's studies, said most people word their New Year's resolutions in a negative way. Instead of focusing on just losing weight, Mosteller said she wants to eat more fruits and vegetables and drink and smoke less this year.

"If you put things in a negative way, you're less likely to succeed," she said.

Mosteller wrote down her New Year's resolutions and has them on display where she can see them daily. She said people should set resolutions to improve themselves from the previous year.

"You set little goals to set the big goals, which are resolutions," she said. "It's one of those things where I want to be a better person than I was before, so I set resolutions."

K-State offers its students services in areas like wellness, finances, academics and counseling so they can work toward their resolutions in January and year-round.

WELLNESS

Small goals — including daily and weekly goals — are necessary to accomplish resolutions related to exercise and wellness, said Erin Dawson, Peters Recreation Complex assistant director for fitness.

For example, Dawson said students should fit in 10 minutes of physical activity each day with walking to class or working on an elliptical machine.

"Setting smaller goals will help people more in accomplishing those longer-term goals," she said. "If it's something specific like a race, they may want to have the help of a personal trainer."

The rec employs more than 20 industry-certified personal trainers who can help students develop programs to achieve their wellness and exercise goals. A quick-start session costs $20 for students and consists of a first session with a fitness assessment and consultation. The second session includes a one-hour workout. Other programs and their costs can be found at www.recservices.k-state.edu/fitnessservices/fitpersonaltrain.htm.

During the fitness assessment, trainers meet with clients and discuss their specific goals, Dawson said. The rec also offers a free weight-room orientation, where personal trainers introduce students to weight machines and cardio equipment.

"Even if they have a really tight budget, they could always do that weight-room orientation, which is free," Dawson said.

Many students and faculty members incorporate wellness and recreational activities into their resolutions, Dawson said.

"There's always an overflow of people coming around at the beginning of the year," she said. "We have had a lot of faculty and staff come in and sign up for payroll deduction so that if they hadn't had a membership before, they could get one."

FINANCE

Saving money is as easy as one trip to the grocery store, said John Grable, associate professor of family studies and human services and director of K-State's personal financial planning program.

Students and faculty could save as much as $20-$30 each month if they buy a 12-pack of pop or water from the grocery store instead of spending pocket cash at the vending machines, Grable said.

Another option for students to save money is starting a savings account if they already do not have one, Grable said.

"If you're not saving money, pay more than the monthly minimum payment on a credit card," he said. "Just do something above and beyond the minimum. You don't have to do dramatic things to become financially fit; you just need to start with the small steps."

Students should stay optimistic even if they break a financial resolution, Grable said.

"Try to save $1 today; at least give it an attempt," he said. "If you're at least trying to save money, you're at least further ahead than someone who doesn't give it any thought."

ACADEMICS

Small adjustments like reviewing class notes every day and attending class can help students achieve their academic resolutions, said Judith Lynch, director of the Academic Assistance Center.

Instead of waiting until the night before an exam to begin studying, Lynch said students should underline their notes or make flash cards within 24 hours of taking them in class.

"Many times students have bad habits, and if they just change those one or two habits to how they study, it can make a world of difference," Lynch said. "They have to make a conscious effort to recognize those habits and make an effort to change them. It's just kind of a way of keeping that in front of them."

Tutoring is the most underutilized service at K-State's Academic Assistance Center, Lynch said. More than 50 tutors are available in most subject areas, especially math and science, she said.

"For any student who is worried about a particular class, we are able to satisfy most requests, and you don't get one [tutor] unless you ask," Lynch said. "If they find out they don't need it, they can drop the tutor. If they find out in the middle of the semester they need one, it might be too late."

Spotting Pamela Ferrero during one of her final exercises, Melissa Haug wraps up the hourlong session. The personal training sessions usually include a variety of exercises that focus on strength training, cardiovascular activities and flexibility training.

SUGGESTIONS FOR SIMPLE RESOLUTIONS

- Whenever possible, get an extra hour of sleep every night.
- Spend 10 minutes every evening straightening up your room.
- Read at least one book per semester just for fun.
- If you drink, consider setting a reasonable limit on how much you drink.
- Spend a little less time watching television.
- Spend a little less time on MySpace or Facebook.
- Work in extra walking into your everyday routine.
- Call your mom more often.
- Do your laundry before it piles up on the floor.
- Avoid drama as much as possible, and be kind to your friends.
- Recycle.
- Try to improve your attention span in class, and attend class more often.
- Volunteer for 20 hours a semester at a local charity.
- Eat breakfast every day.
- If you're religious, spend a little more time observing.
- If you're sexually active, always use protection.
- Stop comparing yourself to other students who you think are smarter or more attractive.
- Cut your "fun" spending by 25 percent.
- Floss at least three times a week, if not more.
- Take a class that pushes your comfort zone.
- Educate yourself about the candidates and the issues in the upcoming elections.

COUNSELING

Balance in one's life is an important factor for setting resolutions, said Dorinda Lambert, Counseling Services associate director and licensed psychologist.

"Most people who are making resolutions are looking back at what worked for them and wanting to make changes," Lambert said. "Students are wanting to look at how they can handle relationships, handle stress and procrastinating."

University Counseling Services offers individual therapy sessions for students. Enrolled students can receive four sessions each fiscal year at no charge. Sessions five through 10 cost $14 per hour, and sessions beyond 10 cost $24 per hour. For more information about University Counseling Services, visit www.k-state.edu/counseling/ or call 785-532-6927.

Because each person is different, Lambert said students have different factors and situations to consider when setting resolutions.

"They might look at how they might become more helpful in organizing their lives," she said. "For some students, that might include finding balance in classes, cutting back on times in Aggieville, cutting back on procrastination and cutting back on stress in their lives."

"Some students might look at how to become more clear on what they want in their lives. Others might look at how they might become more involved with their families."

When choosing resolutions, she said students must set realistic goals and not take on too much.

"They need to make sure they don't make such broad resolutions and need to be realistic about the time frame they have to make those changes and not make too many changes at one time," she said.

ASK THE FIFTH YEAR

Love the ones you are with

Waiting in the hospital, Cake said it best: "The minutes change like seasons — only eight more hours to go."

The clock on the wall stood suspended in time as we all hoped for the best but waited for the worst. Waited. Waited. Waited for the inevitable.

With every second, a dozen tears dropped, a hundred hearts broke, a thousand lives changed forever.

A week ago a friend of mine died. A friend who I had gone to school with for almost 18 years, and before his accident, we had played disc golf in the afternoons and enjoyed long conversations, which often reverted to the naming of former high school classmates that we perceived to be going nowhere with their lives. The list was long.

A week ago a friend of mine died, and I remember feeling helpless that night and even more so during his visitation and funeral. How do you comfort someone who has lost the perfect son? How do you console someone who has lost the most supportive brother, loving cousin, smartest tutor, funniest friend? He was something different for us all, but of all the things he was, he was always the best.

A week ago a friend of mine died, and each day I regret not knowing him more. The man was a genius, plain and simple, and here I was the fool, too scared to ask for help. The man was hilarious, supportive, kind, loving, and here I was, "too busy" to hang out.

A week ago a friend of mine died, a friend who I was fortunate to spend Christmas with not so long ago. I remember hearing the laughter in his voice as he explained his new Wii. Turns out, if you give him a present and tell him not to open it, he would only listen to you so many times. He ruined the surprise by "accidentally" opening the very gifts he was told not to, which, of course, were the Wii games. It frustrated those who gave him the gifts, but he loved it just the same. He was excited about it, too, hoping it might aid in his rehabilitation. We were all hoping.

We went to a movie that night — he, his family and me. He wanted to see "I Am Legend." It scared the crap out of me, but he enjoyed it. It seems all the things that frighten me in life he enjoyed. School, responsibility, looming careers — they all terrify me. But he had a grasp on things. He understood the bigger picture and was able to take things slowly and prevail through adversity. He loved being tested and pushed to the limit of his abilities because to him there were no boundaries; nothing was impossible.

He loved to learn, but more so, he loved to teach. And therein lies my regret; I wish I had been a better student. He knew so much it was scary sometimes. Like his friend said at his visitation, "I guess the world just wasn't ready for stable fusion energy, 'cause God knows, he would have figured it out."

A week ago a friend of mine died, and now I'll never have those opportunities to learn from his grace, his brains, his love.

A week ago a friend of mine passed away, and while I believe he's in a better place now, it still sucks. He was a wonderful person.

Go with love, Luke. We'll always miss you.

to gather volunteers for the debris clean-up.

"I think it's going tremendous," Arena said. "I think it's great that the community is coming together and helping each other out."

Arena said a few local businesses and organizations have donated time and equipment for the project, but more are needed.

"We were wanting to include the limb clean up as part of 'A Day of Service' on Martin Luther King Jr. Day," said Kim Fraiser, coordinator for the Volunteer Program at K-State.

Ken Johnson, Kiwanis Club member, has volunteered to find people within the Kiwanis Club and other clubs affiliated with them to help clean up limbs and branches for disabled citizens.

"I think it's worthwhile," Johnson said. "The two people who called me are really desperate. One woman had a tree limb go through her roof."

For people unable to clean up their downed tree limbs and brush, City Hall has a list of volunteers. Residents can call or stop by City Hall and pick up a copy. The main thing for people to do, Arena said, is to be patient.

Along with the city, the county has started cleaning up along the county roads. "We actually started last week," said Rod Meredith, assistant director of Public Works.

They have two crews picking up the downed branches and debris along the sides of all county-maintained roads.

Meredith said they have no structured program and are not promoting the pick up. But if rural residents leave any branches along the sides of the county road, they will be picked up.

Anyone willing to volunteer should contact city hall at 785-587-4588.

SHORT | Professors, colleagues recall student's humor, intellect

Short also impressed his professors before and after his accident. Miller characterized her former student as "quiet and sharp."

"He was going to be the quintessential engineer," she said. "He was the most selfless student that I know of."

Caterina Scoglio, associate professor in electrical engineering, said Short was doing well when he returned to school after his accident despite all of the injuries.

Besides being an active student, Short was involved with the Phi Kappa Theta fraternity and was a member of Alpha Phi Omega, a service fraternity.

"He had a sense of humor — quiet, but when he spoke he made you laugh," said Beier, a junior in business management and business marketing.

Beier said Short was the scholarship chairman in Phi Kappa Theta, and it was something at which he excelled.

"He kept the guys going with the nose-to-grindstone way," Beier said. "He helped me. I was always able to go to him."

Short was a native of Auburn, Kan., and memorial services in Topeka have already taken place. A memorial service in Manhattan is being planned but has yet to be announced.

Short is survived by his parents, Steven and Janice Short, and his sister, Melissa.

innovations because they didn't trust them," Marsden said. "They always thought the industry was trying to do something that wasn't in the interest of food safety. When we started working with the real pathogen, they could really relate to what we were doing. They could understand what we were doing, they could support it and things started happening much faster."

FAMOUS IN HIS OWN FIELD

Marsden has appeared as a food-safety expert on numerous daytime and evening network news shows. He also is a regular guest on "World Business Review," which Norman Schwarzkopf and Alexander Haig co-host.

"If there's an issue that involves food or water or is scientific in such a way that they don't necessarily understand it well, they bring me on to co-host it," Marsden said. "So I ask the questions and co-host it with either Gen. Haig or Gen. Schwarzkopf so that they don't have to carry all of the technical questions."

Curtis Kastner, director of the Food Science Institute at K-State, said Marsden's American Meat Institute and industrial background added a breadth of knowledge related to food safety at K-State.

"Once you get the expertise and get the program started, that lives beyond just the time we're here because you develop the reputation, you educate the students," said Kastner, who has directed the Food Science Institute since its start in 2001. "It has a life beyond just what we do while we're here."

While Marsden has a full research appointment, he also advises and researches with graduate students. Pamela Hatesohl, master's student in food science, said Marsden is well-respected in the animal sciences industry.

"The field is very interesting to me, and he's been very helpful," Hatesohl said. "Sometimes it's been a little harder because I have a family and go to school, but he's been very helpful with that. With all of the students, he treats us as equals and doesn't talk down to us ever and tries to help all of us learn."

RARE-BOOK COLLECTOR

Marsden also has a rare books collection in the Richard L.D. and Marjorie J. Morse Department of Special Collections at Hale Library. He said he started the collection in his early 20s.

During his adult life, Marsden acquired the Limited Editions Club, a collection of rare autographed and illustrated books published since 1929. Only several full collections exist in the United States, which George Macy started in 1929, Marsden said.

Marsden said Upton Sinclair's "The Jungle" is his favorite book in the Limited Editions Club collection. He said he made his students read the book while he still taught because it relates to the meat industry.

"When you read the book, I always wondered myself — he was sort of a socialist and an activist. Did he just make all that up, or was it really a reflection of the way things were?" Marsden said. "And late in life, he wrote a forward for a Limited Editions Club book and he talked about the fact that he did work in those plants and he did observe those conditions in meat packing plants."

WOMEN | Cats continue strong Big 12 conference performance

Texas Tech coach Kristy Curry called Sweat the most improved player she has seen in the Big 12 this season.

The Wildcats used their experience and teamwork to overwhelm an inexperienced Texas Tech team at times. K-State finished the game with 18 assists and forced the Red Raiders to commit 20 turnovers.

"I think it's just us playing well together — getting the stop we need and hitting (shots) when we need to," Dietz said. "I think we are just really playing the mental game right now of playing mentally tough and competing every day."

Lehning finished the game with seven points, 12 rebounds and nine assists and was a key to the production of the Wildcats offense with her ability to penetrate and find open players.

"As far as teams go in this league, there is (Baylor's Angela) Tisdale and Lehning; as they go, the team goes," Curry said. "Lehning ran her team very well tonight."

The win marked the first time K-State opened league play at 3-0 since the 2003-04 season when they finished 14-2 in the Big 12. K-State is now 11-5 after starting the year off by going 5-5.

"This is a team that consistently works hard to get better everyday and it really does come down to the basics of being resilient and consistent," Patterson said. "We had some losses that were disappointing to us in the preseason, but this group was determined to learn and improve."

The Wildcats continue their three game home stand Saturday against No. 25 Colorado at 7 p.m. It will be the third game against a nationally ranked opponent K-State has played in the last four contests.

Former student president dead

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Former K-State Student Body President Kyle Barker was known as a people person by his peers.

Barker, 29, who was elected student body president in 2001, died at his home in Olathe, Kan. on Dec. 19, 2007 from complications that resulted from a car accident a few years ago, Brandon Kauffman, vice president in 2001 said.

Barker attended K-State from 1997 to 2002, according to the K-State Registrar's office, and majored in political science.

"Kyle was very charismatic and a real people person," said Kauffman, who spoke at Barker's memorial services on Dec. 28, 2007.

Barker's ability to win people over helped him connect with students while campaigning for president, Kauffman said.

When Barker was elected for student body president, he was new to the K-State Student Governing Association.

However, Gayle Spencer, assistant dean of student life and office of student activities and services said Barker "got right in there and did a good job during his term."

Barker's student government administration initiated the SafeRide program, Spencer said. He also was involved with moving the K-State 91.9 radio station studio into K-State Student Union in Spring 2002, according to an article published in 2001 in K-State's Update Magazine, a magazine for the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communication.

"Everybody loved him, he had a great smile," Spencer said. "You felt like you knew him the minute you met him."

Kauffman also said he remembered Barker's dedication to K-State.

"Kyle loved the university and just had a deep admiration and respect for it," Kauffman said. "Manhattan was his favorite place to be."

Kauffman said a large part of their platform focused on improving the overall quality of life of students at K-State.

Barker was also a bartender at Pat's Blue Rib'n Barbecue, president of Phi Delta Theta fraternity and a member of Public Relations Student Society of America and the Political Science Club, according to the magazine article.

Barker is survived by his parents Gerald and Deba Barker of Spring Hill, Kan., his sister Kendra Jenkins of Olathe, Kan., his brother Kelly Baker of Lawrence and his grandmother Betty Weatherwax of Tiverton, R.I.

Prison to add cell space

The Riley County Jail is filling fast, and it has created a space problem for the Riley County Police Department.

The Riley County Board of County Commissioners met Thursday morning to review the current plan for a multi-million dollar facility expansion to deal with the cramped jail.

The project originally was expected to cost between $3.1 million and $3.4 million early

The group of students started designing the gardens in fall 2006. The project will have an architectural firm construct drawings from the students' completed designs. These drawings will be used in the actual construction of the gardens.

Gardens designed to honor Dr. King, Coretta Scott King

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Coretta Scott King died last year, she probably never imagined being commemorated alongside her husband, the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., in this way.

K-State is planning to build a group of gardens in honor of Mrs. King called the Coretta Scott King Gardens of Engagement, which will surround the bust of Dr. King that was dedicated in front of Ahearn Field House last year.

K-State's National Organization of Minority Architecture Students (NOMAS) was commissioned by Myra Gordon, associate provost for diversity and dual career development at K-State, to design the gardens. The students hope to break ground for the project during next year's Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week, Gordon said.

"This is one-of-a-kind," she said. "The bust, the gardens, the fact that it's on Martin Luther King Jr. Drive with him looking down it ... it is truly, truly unique. No one has a garden dedicated to Mrs. King."

Since Dr. King's last university speech was made at Ahearn Field House on Jan. 19, 1968, before he died in April of that year, the university wanted to dedicate that area of campus to him and his wife, Gordon said.

"It's an opportunity to celebrate her as we celebrate Dr. King," she said. "This is a unique opportunity to reunite this woman with her husband. Really, they were an indivisible pair during the civil rights movement."

David Hildebrandt, graduate student in architecture, is the president of NOMAS and has played a leading role in designing the gardens with his fellow group members. He said the gardens' design of three intersecting circles reflects King's principles and teachings.

The bust of Dr. King will stand as an anchor point at the intersection of the circles, which will represent three of his core principles, Hildebrandt said.

One will be a reflection circle with landscaping and vegetation to provide a peaceful environment. Another circle will symbolize action commemorating the action people took during the civil rights era and to acknowledge donors' contributions to the gardens; a timeline of King's life and the civil rights era will be included on a wall in this circle. The third circle represents education and is designed as a gathering place for classes and other groups to meet, Hildebrandt said.

"All of us have worked really hard on this project, and we're very proud of it," Hildebrandt said.

Clarence Oxendine, fifth-year student in landscape architecture and member of NOMAS, said the group started designing the gardens in fall 2006. Soon, the university will have an architectural firm construct drawings from the students' completed designs. These drawings will be used in the actual construction of the gardens.

"They take our design and make it a reality," Oxendine said.

He said the design was a combination of several students' ideas.

Hildebrandt said Colette

Hamilton, graduate student in architecture, contributed to the main design, and Jeremy Anterola, graduate student in landscape architecture, dealt with the technical details and costs.

"We want people to see it from the public realm, so not only current students but prospective students could see it from 17th Street, from Bosco Plaza," Oxendine said. "We want to let them know the significance of what came about in [Ahearn]."

To raise money for the gardens, K-State is hosting an event called "Bring Forty to Celebrate Dr. King" on Thursday, Jan. 24 from noon to 5 p.m. outside the KSDB-FM 91.9 radio station in the K-State Student Union. The Martin Luther King Jr. Planning Committee is encouraging each student organization (or any individuals who want to participate) to donate at least $40 to the fund to commemorate the 40th anniversary of King's visit to K-State.

"We want to make her [Dr. Gordon], the university, and everyone who will be affected by the project proud," Hildebrandt said.

Actor, rapper to speak as part of weeklong MLK celebration

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Performer Ice-T will speak at 7:30 on Monday night in Forum Hall as part of Martin Luther King, Jr., Week activities from Sunday, Jan. 20, to Saturday, Jan. 26.

Brandon Clark, Martin Luther King Jr. Planning Committee member and coordinator for multicultural programs for the K-State Alumni Association, said Ice-T's lecture should be interesting since he is not only a famous actor on the show Law and Order: Special Victims Unit, but also a former gang member and an orphan.

"He's part of Dr. King's dream - he started off with nothing but is now willing to give back to the community," Clark said.

Historically black fraternity Alpha Phi Alpha, of which Dr. King was a member, will hold its annual candlelight vigil Monday evening following the Ice-T lecture.

Clark who is also the fraternity's alpha adviser said the MLK committee is hoping a large amount of students will come to the vigil and lecture since there is no school on Monday.

Careem Gladney, senior in finance and president of Alpha Phi Alpha, said the vigil helps students remember the past but also look toward the future to increase equality and diversity.

"It's important [to have the vigil] so students can look at the past and then move forward into the future," Gladney said.

Following the vigil, K-State's leadership studies department will hold a hot chocolate social, Gladney said.

This year is the 40th anniversary of King's visit here on Jan. 19, 1968 before he was killed in April, Myra Gordon, associate provost for diversity and dual career development, said. King spoke at many schools, she said, but K-State had the privilege of hearing his last university speech.

"K-State is extremely lucky," Gordon said. "We have benefited from the most evolved thinking of Dr. King. To me, that's the greatest honor."

The university also will have a fundraising campaign called "Bring Forty to Celebrate Dr. King" on Thursday. The MLK Committee is encouraging every student organization to donate at least $40 to the campaign.

The money will help fund the Coretta Scott King Gardens of Engagement, which will be built within the next few years outside of Ahearn Field House and will surround the bust of King that was dedicated last year.

"This year is really about celebrating those 40 years since his speech," Clark said. "K-State should take pride in that and take part in at least one activity and remember the life and legacy that he lived."

On Monday at 8 a.m., community members, students and faculty will meet for a prayer breakfast at the Clarion Hotel.

Starting at 10 a.m. Monday, music, a job fair, volunteer activities, and other events will take place at Manhattan Town Center all day.

A film showing on Wednesday at 11:30 a.m. in the Union's Grand Ballroom will be another event for students to mark on their calendars.

"February One: The Story of the Greensboro Four" is a civil rights documentary that tells the story of four college students who sat down at a lunch counter in North Carolina in 1960 and thereby became part of the civil rights movement.

"The men [the Greensboro four] talk about how they were thinking then versus how they are thinking now," Gordon said. "College students played a tremendous role in the civil rights movement."

Clark said the MLK Planning Committee has worked hard to provide events that will be inviting and intriguing for students.

"We do this knowing we have come a very long way from 40 years ago, but we still have a long way to go," Clark said. "The very least you can do is come out and attend one of the many events. This week is for you, the students. Learn something new."

K-State receives $2.5 million grant for soon-to-open biosecurity center

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State might be one step closer to becoming the home of a new federal biosecurity facility.

This week, bioscience researchers from across the state met at the Statehouse in support of research initiatives at Kansas Bioscience Day. The two-day event served as a stepping stone for a new $2.5 million research initiative for K-State's Biosecurity Research Institute, according to the Kansas Bioscience Authority.

According to the KBA, it launched the campaign for the plan, which would strengthen the university's research capabilities in addressing threats to the nation's food supply.

The $2.5 million plan — known as the Collaborative Bioscience Research Initiative — will allow researchers from the government, non-profit organizations and other universities to conduct research and collaborate with K-State, according to the KBA.

"We're issuing a call today for the nation's brightest researchers to partner with us to protect public health and safeguard the agriculture economy," said KBA President Tom Thornton in a KBA press release. "Our facilities are highly specialized and world-class, and our scientists are doing world-class research. Now is the time for collaboration to take on this important national challenge."

This week, the KBA started soliciting grant proposals from researchers who would like to join the collaborative project. Thornton said the CBRI was established to support inter-institutional research aimed at developing disease countermeasures, providing advanced testing, threat evaluation capabilities and strengthening institutional biosecurity capabilities.

Strengthening the abilities of the BRI was needed, as it will formally begin full-fledged research this spring. The solidity of BRI research and this $2.5 million project can breed better biosecurity opportunities, like the opportunity for K-State being selected as the home of a National Bio- and Agro-Defense Facility. Kansas House Speaker Melvin Neufeld, R-Ingalls, said he anticipates the collaborative research project should help Kansas attract NBAF.

"Initiatives like this highlight our commitment to win (NBAF) on the merits," Neufeld states in a media release. "Our state already has established itself as a world leader in animal and plant biosecurity. The Collaborative Biosecurity Research Initiative and the NBAF complement and expand the work of the Biosecurity Research Institute, a state-of-the-art facility at K-State, as well as the numerous plant and animal companies already in our state. The NBAF would be a great fit in Kansas."

Yet, even more importantly, K-State President Jon Wefald said the plan would help put K-State on the map.

"This would set the stage for basic research, applied research, the commercialization of that research, new startup companies, new jobs. The benefits to Kansas would be, well, monumental," Wefald said.

Competing against four finalists for the biosecurity facility, Wefald said he remains positive about what the university has to offer but also realizes the area might not meet big-city demands. If chosen as the NBAF site, Manhattan might have to accommodate to those needs.

"Our setback? We don't have an international airport in Manhattan, Kansas," Wefald said. "You know, I think the other sites are a little bit close to a — you might say — a national, an international airport, so we're working with the City of Manhattan."

"So if we do get it, there would be a proposal to kick in to have better air service. So we're even going to try to get a win on that one too."

Wefald said he remains optimistic about the possibility of K-State becoming a key player in security research.

K-State's Biosecurity Research Institute is one of four finalists for a $450 million federal biosecurity facility.

"We've got the undivided support from the speaker of the house, the president of the Senate, the governor, the state legislature, the congressional delegation — clearly it's the No. 1 priority of the State of Kansas," Wefald said. "Then look at it: we're geographically in the middle of America — we're in the middle of agriculture. Strategically, geographically, scientifically, I think we have a shot at this."

That shot — however likely it might be — is against four other finalists for the $450 million federal biosecurity facility. The finalists include sites in Georgia, Mississippi, North Carolina and Texas. The Department of Homeland Security will make its final decision in October, and construction would be complete in 2013.

Those cryin' eyes

Garnering sympathy often dishonest but effective politics

Minutes after the results of the New Hampshire Democratic primary were released, news of Hillary Clinton's victory over Barack Obama spread nationwide like the latest celebrity scandal.

It seems analysts were wrong in predicting Obama would take New Hampshire, though he was polling well ahead of Hillary before the votes started pouring in. This surprising turnaround victory led many to wonder why the experts missed the mark. While some people chalked up her victory to coincidence, others pointed their fingers at a more questionable reason — the sympathy vote.

On Jan. 7, just one day before the primary, Hillary met with New Hampshire voters in a coffee shop to answer questions.

At one point in the session, she went off on an impassioned tangent. "I just don't want to see us fall backward as a nation," Hillary said, her eyes glistening with tears. "I mean, this is very personal for me. Not just political. I see what's happening. We have to reverse it. Some people think elections are a game: who's up or who's down. It's about our country. It's about our kids' future. It's about all of us together."

The rhetoric alone wasn't unique or exceptionally moving, but the fact that it was coupled with tears made it stand out like a lime-green suit at a funeral.

And this is from Hillary of all people — a woman who has often been labeled an "ice queen" for her frosty disposition. The real reason for the ruckus is not the tears themselves, but the motivation behind them. Many people harbor suspicions that the tears were fake — a political ploy to counter whispers of her inhumanity and make her more appealing to the public.

Bill Kristol, editor of the politically conservative magazine The Weekly Standard, even went as far as saying on the Fox News Channel that night, "It's the tears. She pretended to cry, the women felt sorry for her, and she won."

Though the primary's results confirm that more women voted for Hillary than for Obama — 47 percent to 34 percent, respectively — people like Kristol go too far by claiming she won because of the women's sympathy vote. For one, that kind of chauvinistic thinking does nothing but aggravate the already sore issue of gender equality. I realize it's no secret women are generally more sensitive and sympathetic than men. Still, that doesn't mean a few tears render them incapable of making rational decisions.

Besides, I doubt the women of New Hampshire — or women in general — appreciate being slapped with a comment that essentially refers to them as emotional saps.

Hillary's critics don't want to see a gender rift appear within the electorate, I think they should start choosing their words a little more wisely. I can't rule out the possibility that the tears were fake, but if that was the case, I can't say I'd blame her. Pulling a stunt like that might be a bit underhanded and dishonest, but it's smart politics, and Hillary's opponents know it.

If appealing to people's emotions gives you even the slightest edge over your opponents, why not go for it? I bet the other candidates wouldn't hesitate to show a little feeling if they were certain it would gain them a few votes. Does this mean we might see other candidates dissolving into waterworks? I wouldn't count on it, mainly because I don't think they would want to risk ruining their generally stolid reputations.

But hey, it's still a long time until November. Perhaps we'll see a few more showers after all.

TO THE POINT

Students can make a difference in presidential selection

In the New Hampshire presidential primaries, 271 percent more young people voted compared to the 2004 primaries, according to research from the University of Maryland.

Young voters, including K-State students, have taken advantage of the social-networking abilities of the 21st century to organize groups on Web sites like Facebook.com and also have used the Internet to make it easier for young voters to contribute to campaigns by donating money or volunteering.

To show how much young voters can make a difference, look at Republican presidential candidate Ron Paul. He raised more than $4 million in one day from private donors, many of whom were young voters fed up with the current political climate.

With the tightness of both parties' presidential races, younger voters have a chance, even with a single vote, to help choose their preferred candidate.

The Kansas caucuses are approaching in a few weeks, and with no clear front-runners, Kansas could be a bigger part in this year's race compared to the last several elections. Usually, the Democratic and Republican presidential candidates have sealed victories by the time the Kansas caucuses take place.

The deadline to register for the Democratic caucus is Jan. 21, and the deadline for the Republican caucus is Jan. 25. To register, all students have to do is go to the Riley County Web site, print the registration form and mail it or turn it in to the county clerk's office. If students are registered somewhere else, they can still register in Manhattan.

It's quick and easy, and for a change, Kansans' votes might actually help shape the race for the White House on both sides of the aisle.

Americans spend a lot of money during the Christmas season.

I am not trying to send anyone on a guilt trip, but look at some of these figures. Last year, the National Retail Federation predicted $457.4 billion would be spent during the holidays. The group called it a bad year compared to what is normally spent. Our minds can't really comprehend a figure that large.

To put it into perspective, at the 2007 G-8 summit, President Bush promised $30 billion to fight AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis in Africa.

The NRF also estimated that $20 billion would be spent the day after Thanksgiving. So even during what the NRF deems a bad year, we spend $427 billion more on Christmas gifts than on fighting AIDS in Africa and only $10 billion less on a single shopping day.

Giving and getting gifts is fun. So if you think I am saying we should all stop, you're missing the point; we just need to scale back.

According to Associated Consumers' Web site, the average household spent more than $500 on gifts this year. Why couldn't that figure be $250, with the other half going to something or someone who needs it more?

When I asked my brother what he was going to spend his Christmas money on, he said he gave it to a school in Sudan that his high school has partnered with. The money will buy books and food for children whose families would otherwise not be able to afford it.

With this in mind, I looked at the guitar pedal I bought with my Christmas money. There is nothing wrong with buying myself a guitar pedal for Christmas, but I realized my brother used his money in a much more meaningful way than I did.

You don't have to send your money across the world. Give it to the single mother across the street to help pay for groceries or a couple restaurant visits, or share it with the Salvation Army to help them buy coats and gloves.

One friend was given extra Christmas money and told by her parents that she could keep it or give it to someone who she saw and felt needed it. My friend gave the money to a lady who said it would change her whole holiday season, because she would now be able to buy gifts for her kids.

MARK WAMPLER

My friend said it was the best Christmas she can remember.

Other friends participated in a movement called the Advent Conspiracy, started by people in Portland, Ore., who feel holiday spending is out of control. People who participate donate money in family or friends' names toward clean-water efforts for African villages. On Christmas, the participant gives the family member or friend a card that shows the amount donated along with a water bottle as a reminder of the gift's purpose. Their Web site, www.AdventConspiracy.org, tells more about the group's purpose.

It's hard to rebel against American expectations of bigger-and-better gift exchanging during the holidays. Though it's a little late for the 2007 holiday season, the concept still applies throughout the year.

When December rolls around again, think about spending a little less on yourself and more on people who don't have as much. It can make a difference in someone else's life.

More young voters involved in election process

This will be the first article in a five-week series examining the voting behavior of different groups within society and their effects on the 2008 presidential election. In the next four weeks, the Collegian will examine the electoral effects of the female, black, military and religious communities nationally and locally, in that order.

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State student Alonzo Jones is joining his peers in the young-voter revolution.

Jones, freshman in construction science and management, registered to vote because he said it seemed like the right thing to do.

"It's very important to become involved with the elections and learn what's going on," he said. "It's our future."

During the New Hampshire presidential primaries, there was a 271 percent increase in young voters compared to the 2004 elections. This percentage increase represents 84,230 individuals between the ages of 18 and 29 years of age who voted in New Hampshire on Jan. 9., according to a revised estimate from the University of Maryland.

Students for Obama, an organization to support the campaign of Barack Obama, a Democratic senator from Illinois, is helping to raise awareness of the election at K-State.

The K-State chapter is having a kick-off event at 5:30 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union Room 206.

"We want to get everybody back together from break and get in contact with those who have just started paying attention — especially due to Iowa," said Bryan Cox, junior in anthropology and economics and a member of the Students for Obama campaign.

Cox said he comes from a predominantly Republican family. Despite some pressure from his family to consider changing parties, he said his family is satisfied that he is involved in the elections at his age.

"Being a Democrat at K-State is like being a student," he said. "Like every student here at K-State, you're having something you're working toward. Being an Obama supporter, it's nice to know that I am having an impact."

More young voters are volunteering and paying attention in the 2008 elections because of the efforts of organizations like Rock the Vote, a non-profit organization based in Washington, D.C., which uses the entertainment industry to get youth involved in the political process. Rock the Vote has worked with celebrities like Eva Mendes, Justin Timberlake, Sean "P. Diddy" Combs and Jada Pinkett-Smith.

Rock the Vote communications director Chrissy Faesen said she got involved because of the organization's purpose and strategy to reach youth.

"Rock the Vote is a great organization that engages youth through what they're interested in to really reach out," she said. "It's an exciting year with the new technology such as Facebook and Youtube. With all these, we can utilize them for politics' purposes."

Many organizations are taking advantage of this advancement in technology to get involved and reach out. K-State's Young Democrats and College Republicans have Facebook groups to reach students.

George Weston, graduate student in sociology and College Republicans president, said political organizations are good places for students to get involved in the political process.

"This is our future," Weston said. "What about Social Security and healthcare? Who's going to have the best plan to fix these issues? Being able to get involved and discuss with others around you takes your one vote, and it could become two, four or even eight votes."

Cox said he wants to encourage others to get involved and have their vote make a difference.

"Your efforts can count when you actively work with other people and put your viewpoint forward," he said. "And with that, you can influence others in an important way — it's an accomplishment."

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Creighton loss sparks 6-game win streak

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When the K-State women's basketball team fell to 5-5 toward the end of the nonconference season, the Wildcats were in need of a switch.

It turns out it was a 69-62 loss to Creighton that motivated K-State to come off their winter break and surge to six straight wins and a 3-0 conference record.

"I think our major turning point was after the Creighton game," sophomore Ashley Sweat said. "We were disappointed, and we were going home for break, and I think it gave us all time to think about what we want this season when we came back from break."

Sweat said the team decided it needed to start winning games as soon as possible when it traveled to Los Angeles for a two-game tournament.

K-State swept the tournament and returned home for its final nonconference contest against Western Illinois. The Wildcats won 68-53 and faced the challenge of a two-game road trip to Texas to play two ranked teams.

"People are impatient nowadays," K-State coach Deb Patterson said. "They want things right away and they really lose perspective on the fact that the schedule we played was a tough schedule."

The Wildcats knocked off Texas A&M and Texas to survive the Lone Star trip with a 2-0 record that built early conference confidence.

Last season, the Wildcats lost confidence with the injury to then-sophomore Marlies Gipson. The experience K-State gained after her injury has contributed to the Wildcats playing more as a team.

"I think we've just been playing together so well, and I think if we keep playing like we are right now, we can really do some damage," Sweat said.

Patterson identified the biggest difference between now and when the team was 5-5 is the way team members

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Cats ready to see tourney competition

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A sense of déjà vu is hitting the K-State women's tennis team as it prepares for its first meet of 2008 at the Georgia Bulldog Invitational on Saturday in Athens, Ga.

The tournament always features the tennis teams from K-State, Troy State, Mississippi State and Georgia.

The Wildcats look to match their efforts from last fall by getting off to a hot start in the spring. Senior Viviana Yrurera is coming off a 6-6 record in singles play for the fall, including a stretch of five wins in six matches. In doubles action, sophomore Natasha Vieira and junior Katerina Kudlackova make up the top doubles team coming into the spring. In the fall, the two registered a 5-3 record, including a four-match win streak.

After this tournament, the Wildcats begin dual play on Feb. 2 against Syracuse at Ahearn Field House. During the spring, K-State will play 10 teams in the top-75 and five teams in the top-35 of the preseason Intercollegiate Tennis Association Rankings.

The K-State track team will host the Wildcat Invitational today and Saturday at Ahearn Field House. Coach Cliff Rovelto said the women's team is a more balanced team while the men's team relies on a few standout performers.

K-State track team to host weekend meet at Ahearn

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After opening its season in Fayetteville, Ark., at the Arkansas Invitational, K-State will face several track teams at Ahearn Field House today and Saturday to kick off what should be a busy season.

Friday's action will include men's events like the weight throw and high jump. Those events will begin at 4 p.m., and the running events starting at 6:30. On Saturday, the women will be in the spotlight, with the long jump starting the day at 12:15 p.m. The running events for the women will start at 2:30.

Coach Cliff Rovelto said although some of his athletes' biggest competition will be their fellow teammates this weekend, some athletes are still trying to find their niche.

"Most of the other kids that we're competing in the fall have competed a few times," Rovelto said. "There's still a few that have been competing, but not in their best events yet. Over the next couple weeks, we'll see them in what their strong events are, and after that, we'll have a better idea of what kind of a team we have."

At Arkansas, there were several Wildcats who made a difference on K-State's final results. Junior Scott Sellers placed first in the high jump, clearing 7 feet, two-and-a-quarter inches.

Placing second in the running events were junior Mike Myer, senior Donnie Parrish, junior Liliani Mendez and sophomore Beverly Ramos.

Sophomore Alexandra Gonzalez set a personal best in pole vault with a vault of 13 feet. Gonzalez was only the third Wildcat in K-State history to reach the 13-foot mark in the pole vault.

However, when looking at a team, it's not about the individual accomplishments as much as how complete the team is, Rovelto said.

"Our sport is very unique in that you can evaluate teams and programs in a lot of different ways," he said. "You can look at a team as to how complete they are. You can look at it in terms of a conference level team. Our conference is not a series of competitions. Where you place at the conference championship is just in that two-day meet."

The biggest disadvantage for K-State might be in the team's youth. Rovelto said while the women's team is more complete, the men's team has stand-out individuals.

"I think our women's team is a strong team," he said. "I think there's enough bullets to go to the conference championship and score a significant number of points. I know what our team has but I don't know what other teams have. Over the next couple of weeks, we'll have some idea."

"On the men's side, we've got individuals who will do extremely well at the conference level and at the national level, but we just don't have as many bullets as we do on the women's side."

Most of the reason for the lack of depth on the men's side is due to financial aid. More than 50 percent of the men's side are underclassmen. Rovelto said there will be more financial aid available next year to bring in more athletes.

"We didn't complete our team this year so we would have more aid available for next year," he said. "We felt we had an opportunity to bring in a greater number of high-quality athletes next year."

With the competition this weekend not being as stiff as it will be later this semester, Rovelto said he's just ready to see where the team stands this weekend.

"It's an opportunity in that it's a home meet and it's not necessarily a high-level meet," he said. "Our throwers and jumpers will be competing and most of their major competition is against their own teammates. We'll see how things transpire."

Beasley-led Wildcats to face tough test against No. 10 Texas A&M on Saturday

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Though K-State is 1-0 in conference play for the first time in eight years, the men's team cannot rest on its laurels.

"It's the Big 12," said coach Frank Martin after the Oklahoma game last Saturday. "I said it the other day; we have 16 quality games looking at us in the face."

One of those quality games will be at 3 p.m. Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum, when No. 10 Texas A&M (17-2, 1-1 Big 12 Conference) comes to Bramlage Coliseum. Texas A&M lost Wednesday to in-state rival Texas Tech in Lubbock, 53-68, and Aggies coach Mark Turgeon said the team hopes to remain above .500 in conference play.

"We have to go out and prove that we are going to be a great road team, and this week will give us the opportunity to do it," Turgeon said.

"I think you have the chance to either have a special season or you have the chance to have an above-average season, and if you want to have a special season, you have to learn how to win on the road. It's a big week for us, and our young men know it, and our coaches know it, and so we will be prepared."

Leading the Aggies in scoring is junior guard Josh Carter, who is averaging 13.4 points per game. Freshman forward DeAndre Jordan, leads the team in rebounding, averaging almost seven boards per game.

K-State (11-4, 1-0 Big 12) leads the conference in rebounding, averaging almost 44 boards per game. Freshman forward Michael Beasley is the leading scorer in the conference, averaging almost 25 points per game. He also is the conference's leading rebounder, averaging 13 per game.

Freshman guard Jacob Pullen, who has averaged nine points and more than three assists per game, said the win at Oklahoma was good for the young Wildcats.

"It was a good win, especially on the road," Pullen said. "As far as the atmosphere, not being at home and having our crowd, it was difficult. It was a good win for us. It was really a confidence boost for us because now, we're thinking that we can beat anyone in the Big 12."

The Wildcats have had a full week to prepare for Texas A&M, a fact Martin said he wasn't very happy about.

"At this time of year, you want to play," he said. "You don't want to have long breaks between games, but it is what it is. We've tried to break the week down as best as we can so we don't overload the guys down at the end of the week."

Low supply, high demand cause egg prices to increase, animal sciences professor says

By Owen Kennedy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Breakfast is the most important meal of the day, but soon it might become the most expensive.

The price of eggs in the United States has more than doubled in the last year — from 69 cents per dozen to $1.48 per dozen, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

One K-State associate professor says a couple of the reasons for the increase are low supply and high demand.

Scott Beyer, associate professor of animal sciences and industry, said voluntary regulations regarding the lower amount of hens in a facility have had some effect, since space is limited.

"Welfare regulations are asking producers to put fewer birds in a house," Beyer said. "Where you might have once had 110,000 birds in a house, you now have 103,000. Fewer hens equal fewer eggs."

Adding to the shortage, Beyer said prices associated with raising poultry also have risen, causing some producers to slow expansion.

He said automated facilities require large amounts of steel, which are expensive.

He also said uncertainty influences a producer's decisions.

"People are a little bit worried," Beyer said. "Steel prices are high, interest rates and feed cost are high, and the economy is a concern. You might not invest $20 million if you don't know what's going to happen in two years."

Since corn and grains are essential to raising chickens, Beyer said demand for ethanol might influence prices as well.

"It has less to do with how popular ethanol is, and more to do with the price of grain associated with ethanol."

"Oil is skyrocketing," he said. "Some people would put fuel in their cars before they put food in their mouths; sad but true."

Demand for eggs also has increased recently, Beyer said, possibly because many misconceptions about egg consumption and health problems, namely high cholesterol, have been proven untrue.

Ryan Meireis, assistant manager of Ray's Apple Market, said he has noticed egg prices rising in the store.

"I've definitely seen prices go up, especially in the last year," Meireis said. "Probably about 50 percent or more."

Beyer said Kansas and the Midwest have some of the cheaper eggs in the country because many of the eggs are produced in the region.

He said the East and West coasts have seen high price hikes.

These hikes also are being noticed overseas. This is because of high shipping costs for eggs and feed.

Meireis said customers are not the only people affected by the price increases.

He said store owners are having to pay more for eggs and egg products, and stores are not benefitting from high prices.

He said some customers have complained about the prices, but most have paid the higher price with little concern.

"People got to eat eggs," he said.

U.S. Supreme Court expands vague definition of child porn

THE DAILY UNIVERSE (BYU)

PROVO, Utah – The Supreme Court will weigh in this month on the constitutionality of a federal law that expands the definition of child pornography in an effort to crack down on cyberspace prowlers.

The court will decide if two phrases in the PROTECT (Prosecutorial Remedies and Other Tools to End the Exploitation of Children Today) Act of 2003 are unlawfully vague and overbroad. The court is expected to take the case under advisement after oral arguments and issue its opinion before the end of its current term in June 2008.

ORIGIN OF THE PROBLEM

The issue surfaced after Michael Williams pleaded guilty to two counts of child pornography: possessing the material and "pandering" (promoting) the images.

In an Internet sting operation, Williams offered sexually explicit pictures of his 4-year-old daughter to an undercover federal agent. Authorities also found 22 images of underage children on Williams' computer.

Following Williams' appeal, the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals overturned the pandering conviction, calling the PROTECT Act's language "impermissibly vague and facially unconstitutional."

The pandering section of the PROTECT Act was the latest of several attempts by Congress to strengthen penalties for Internet predators.

In one of those attempts, Congress passed an anti-pornography law that prohibited the creation of computer-generated images of children because the virtual children were not "real." The Supreme Court struck this down in 2002 for infringing on freedom of expression.

Juan Becerra, Salt Lake City FBI spokesman, said if the court upheld Williams' appeal, it would definitely take an arrow out of the law enforcement's quiver, but it wouldn't change their strong stance or the charges against those who engage in child pornography. "We're still going to go after these guys as hard and aggressively as before," he said.

Becerra also said this area leads the nation in child pornography investigations, arrests and convictions.

Pandering, however, specifically prohibits advertising, promoting, presenting or soliciting "any material or purported material in a manner that reflects the belief, or that is intended to cause another to believe, that the material or purported material" contains child pornography.

The controversy grew out of the two subjective phrases, which Williams claims are too vague and smother free speech: "reflects the belief," and "intended to cause another to believe."

A person does not have to possess the unlawful material to be charged with pandering; merely describing it in a way that "reflects the belief" that one possesses it is enough.

Congress made it clear that such a strict law is necessary because "even fraudulent offers to buy or sell unprotected child pornography help to sustain the illegal market for this material."

RESEARCHING THE NEED

Shoring up the PROTECT Act against critics, Congress researched 15 rulings to justify a "compelling interest" in the continued enforceability and effectiveness of its prohibitions against child pornography: They cited a 1982 child pornography case, New York v. Ferber, where the Supreme Court wrote, "the most expeditious if not the most practical method of law enforcement may be to dry up the market for this material by imposing severe criminal penalties on persons selling, advertising or otherwise promoting the product."

The Free Speech Coalition, a watchdog organization for the adult novelty and entertainment industry, has followed Williams' case closely, and a spokesman says the current act makes it a federal offense to merely describe a stick figure as child pornography.

Reed Lee, lawyer and FSC board member said, "Prescribing to such a law would have a chilling affect on speech."

The FSC's involvement with the case is relevant to the adult industry it represents because many adult producers bank on such descriptions; videos, magazines and internet sites commonly display words such as "very young," "school girls" and even, "child" to interest viewers – "any of which could be argued as pandering child porn," Lee said.

"If there were a narrow enough provision, we would agree to it," Lee said. "But I just can't believe that there's enough [child pornography] out there to justify such a restriction."

SOME ARE SKEPTICAL

FBI officials who spoke to the Daily Universe didn't seem sympathetic toward Williams or those using free speech to sell pornography with youthful titles.

"Take that [pandering section] away, protect them with the First Amendment and watch these [offenders] freely talk about and embellish what they've done or dream of doing to these little kids," said an FBI sex abuse specialist out of Los Angeles, who asked to remain anonymous because he is not an official spokesman. "That kind of talk encourages other perverts to do the same [things]."

Vice president of International High Technology Crime Investigation Association Art Bowker, who works closely with the FBI, echoed the former agent, dubbing the Internet a kind of support group for predators.

"Before the advent of the Internet, individuals with deviant tendencies usually were isolated," Bowker said. "Today, however, offenders feel normal because they see from chat rooms and Web sites that many other individuals have the same interests. Thus, the behavior becomes reinforced, perhaps emboldening them to commit acts, such as sex with a child, in the real world."

Many legal observers expect what many enforcement officials fear: the court will uphold the overturned decision and recant Williams' "pandering" charge, sending Congress back to find other ways to prosecute predators.

Voters question relevance of 2008 candidates' gender, racial differences at Democratic presidential debate

THE REBEL YELL (UNLV)

LAS VEGAS – One is black. One is a woman. One is white.

One of the questions posed at Tuesday night's Democratic presidential debate at Cashman Center on Las Vegas Boulevard: How much does this matter?

MINORITY REPORT

"Sen. [Barack] Obama and I agree completely that neither race nor gender should be a part of this campaign," New York Sen. Hillary Clinton said.

While Clinton, Obama and former Sen. John Edwards all agreed that character and the ability to spark change should be the defining factors for voters, one viewer who submitted a question noted that the potential to break historical barriers is impossible to ignore.

"The policy differences among the remaining candidates are so slight that we appear to be choosing on the basis of personality and life story," San Diego, Calif. voter Margaret Wells wrote. "Why should I, as a progressive woman, not resent being forced to choose between the first viable female candidate and the first viable African-American candidate?"

The debate was intended to highlight minority issues, being nationally sponsored by the Nevada Democratic Party, the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce and 100 Black Men of America, Inc. Local partners were the African-American Democratic Leadership Council, Impacto and the College of Southern Nevada.

However, with issues such as candidates' individual backgrounds, the general economy, the war in Iraq and Yucca Mountain dominating the debate, many felt minority issues were glazed over.

"I didn't even hear the words 'affirmative action' once," CSN history and political science professor Alan Balboni said, noting that billing the event as a debate on black-brown issues may have been misleading. "I don't even know if I heard the word 'discrimination.'"

Fellow CSN professor Mike Green shared a sentiment of disappointment after the debate.

"Nothing against MSNBC, but they focused more on the horse race and the controversies," Green said.

The top three Democratic Party contenders – a fourth presidential candidate, U.S. Rep. Dennis Kucinich of Ohio, was excluded from the debate by MSNBC – spent much of the remaining time attempting to distinguish themselves from their counterparts.

OTHER ISSUES MATTER

Clinton highlighted her continual opposition toward using Yucca Mountain to store nuclear waste, criticizing Edwards for twice voting in favor of the it and Obama for being financially backed by an energy company in support of the repository.

In his rebuttal, Edwards said he made those votes before new evidence and forged paperwork were discovered. He also tried to distance himself from the other two candidates by saying he's the only candidate adamantly opposed to nuclear power, as well as coal-fired power plants.

Other commentators in the spin room after the debate pointed out that many of the general issues addressed, like the subprime mortgage rates leading to a wave of home foreclosures, are of particular interest to minorities.

When it comes to foreclosures per capita, Nevada, a state with a large minority population, has been hit the hardest by the housing crisis.

Clinton said during the debate that blacks and Hispanics were some of the most vulnerable during this crisis, and the candidate was more outspoken than her counterparts on her plan to freeze interest rates to prevent foreclosures as well as hold a moratorium on foreclosures for 90 days if and after sworn into office.

"The issues that face all Americans face minorities in sometimes a much more acute fashion," said Rodney Slater, the secretary of transportation under Bill Clinton's administration, who was there to support Hillary Clinton. "Educational opportunities are especially important when it comes to African-Americans and Latinos."

Education took the spotlight several times during the televised debate.

Obama said good answers are not what the government lacks when it comes to education.

"What we don't have is a sense of urgency in the White House," Obama said.

When asked about the disproportionately high drop-out rate for black males in all levels of the educational system, Obama said as president he intends to talk about the importance of parents nurturing children toward positive attitudes about education.

"Particularly African-American fathers," he said. "[They are] all too often absent from the home. And as somebody who grew up without a father, I know how important that is."

SUPPORT FOR MILITARY

Education and minorities were also discussed within the context of ROTC programs. Moderator Tim Russert cited a federal statute that says a college or university may lose federal funding if it does not provide space for military recruiters or provide an ROTC program for its students. All three candidates agreed they would "vigorously enforce" the statute.

Clinton cited her work to stop the current administration's attempt to take away signing bonuses from soldiers who get wounded.

Obama said he would seek an increase in force structure in the U.S. Army and Marines to ease strain on families who have dealt with their loved ones going on multiple tours to war zones.

Edwards noted that supporting the military needs to be extended to veterans that have suffered expensive medical injuries, post-traumatic stress disorder and homelessness.

"They didn't leave us on our own. We shouldn't leave them on their own," Edwards said, noting that job training, comprehensive physical and mental health and additional education should all be available to these individuals.

Debate sponsor CSN does not have a permanent recruiting station on any of its campuses. However, according to interim vice president of academic affairs Carlos Campo, they regularly get requests from the armed forces to set up booths and always allow them the room.

Campo said he was pleased recruitment was brought up because of the underlying issue that minority students may be taken advantage of by military recruiters.

Mulvane City Council advocates proposed casino, though many object

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MULVANE, Kan. — The city council on Wednesday narrowly approved a plan for a proposed $500 million casino resort in Mulvane.

After listening to about 70 residents on both sides of the issue, the council voted 3-2 to endorse the proposal by Harrah's Entertainment-Summer Gaming and Resorts to locate a casino near the Mulvane exit to the Kansas Turnpike.

The vote allows Harrah's to submit its proposal to the Kansas Lottery for consideration, competing with two Wellington casino plans endorsed by the Summer County Commission. Those proposals, both near the Wellington turnpike exit, were offered by Penn National Gaming and Marvel Gaming-Binion Family Trust.

MGM Mirage-Foxwoods Development-Chisholm Creek Ventures also has proposed a $425 million project for the Mulvane exit and is seeking annexation from the city for a possible endorsement.

The state's new gambling law requires endorsements from cities or counties where casinos are to be located before prospective casino managers can sign contracts with the Kansas Lottery. Harrah's was granted annexation by the city last week in order to try to obtain an endorsement.

Harrah's expects to draw more than 3 million visitors annually and bring in $274 million in gambling revenue by the casino's third year.

The casino would cover 70,000 square feet with more than 2,000 slot machines and 50 gaming tables. Two hotels with a total of 275 rooms would have separate entrances so patrons wouldn't have to pass through the casino to reach them.

Several hundred people filled the Mulvane High School auditorium for Wednesday's hearing on Harrah's proposal. Speakers were about evenly split between pro- and anti-casino forces.

Opponents said the casino would be a bad fit for the community, ruin local businesses and create social problems such as crime and gambling addiction.

"The social impact was a lot greater than I feel others were willing to look at," said council member Shawn Townson, who voted against the plan.

Some urged the council to allow residents to vote on the issue.

"Let us vote so that you can say to all that you were doing what the people of Mulvane want," said resident Karen DeGraaf.

Pro-casino speakers cited a casino's economic benefits to Mulvane and Sumner County, including lower property taxes, new jobs and new business growth.

Mulvane resident Charles Morgan said he and a growing number of residents were passionate about the proposal to spur economic development.

"When developers see a significant investment in an area, it's like a field of dreams, bringing more investment," he said.

Kansans attack abortion through 120-year-old law

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — Religious conservatives have dusted off a largely forgotten 1887 state law that allows citizens to launch grand jury investigations, and they are using it to help turn Kansas into one of the nation's biggest abortion battlegrounds.

A grand jury that was impaneled Jan. 8 through a citizen petition drive is investigating Dr. George Tiller, a Wichita clinic operator abhorred by anti-abortion activists because he is one of the nation's few physicians who perform late-term abortions. This is the second such citizen investigation of Tiller since 2006.

Phillip Jauregui, counsel for the anti-abortion Life Legal Defense Foundation, said Kansans are invoking the 19th-century law because prosecutors are too soft on abortion.

"This is a right the people of Kansas have given themselves," he said.

But others say the law is a dangerous tool.

"This is a witch hunt — plain and simple," said Vicki Saporta, president of the National Abortion Federation, a pro-choice group. "It clearly demonstrates the inherent danger of empowering biased advocacy groups to impanel a grand jury."

Normally, prosecutors decide whether to convene a grand jury to investigate something and bring charges.

Under the Kansas law, enacted during the Gilded Age and the nation's great railroad boom to curb political corruption, the people can force an investigation if they collect signatures from a certain percentage of voters in a county. In small counties, that can be a few hundred signatures; in Wichita's Sedgewick County, about 4,000.

Five other states provide for citizen-petitioned grand juries: Oklahoma, New Mexico, North Dakota, Nebraska and Nevada, according to a Tiller attorney.

One of the most publicized grand juries convened by citizen petition was formed in Oklahoma after the 1995 Oklahoma City bombing, which killed 168 people. The investigation was prompted by suspicions that Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols had help in the bombing. But the grand jury found no evidence of a wider conspiracy or a government cover-up.

So far, no other state appears to have used the process to pursue a social and moral agenda as extensively as Kansas, which is attacking not just abortion, but pornography.

Since 2005, citizen petitions have forced several grand juries in Kansas to investigate whether adult bookstores should be charged with obscenity. Twenty stores were indicted, said Phillip Cosby, executive director of the National Coalition for Protection of Children and Families. Most of the cases have not been resolved.

The strategy? "To strengthen the prosecutor's hand" and let authorities know that "they are not alone — that we the people feel there is a very big problem," Cosby said.

The anti-abortion movement rediscovered the law when David Gittrich used it in 2006 to force an investigation into the death of a Texas woman who had an abortion at Tiller's clinic, though the grand jury failed to return an indictment, people noticed.

"I was inspired by God to use the grand jury," Gittrich said.

This time, Tiller is under investigation on suspicion of violating a 1998 state law restricting late-term abortions. He has denied any wrongdoing.

Tiller has long been at the very center of the nation's abortion battle. His clinic was bombed in 1985, and eight years later, a woman shot him in both arms.

"We see in Kansas a perfect example of a system which has virtually become active vigilantism," said Lee Thompson, an attorney for Tiller. "A very small minority number of people who have a specific agenda can force a criminal investigation — and I think that is a usurpation of the executive power of government."

Forcing a grand jury investigation requires signatures from 2 percent of the number of people who voted in the last governor's election in the county, plus 100 more names. In Tiller's county, activists gathered nearly 8,000, or twice as many as required.

Similarly, in December, a citizen-impaneled grand jury began investigating a Planned Parenthood clinic in the Kansas City suburb of Overland Park.

Then-Kansas Attorney General Phill Kline filed charges against Tiller in 2006, accusing him of performing 15 late-term abortions without the required medical justification and failing to report details to state health authorities. But a judge threw out the case in a jurisdictional dispute involving the district attorney in Wichita.

Then in June, Kline's successor, Paul Morrison, brought new charges against Tiller, accusing him of not getting the signature of a second doctor before performing late-term abortions.

Abortion opponents complained that the charges did not go far enough, and took matters into their own hands by pressing for a grand jury.

"I am still looking for justice," Gittrich said. "I am going to figure some way to get justice."

Clinton attempts to mend black ties

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COMPTON, Calif. - Hillary Rodham Clinton and her campaign tried to mend ties to black voters Thursday when a key supporter apologized to her chief rival, Barack Obama, for comments that hinted at Obama's drug use as a teenager. The candidate herself, meanwhile, praised the Rev. Martin Luther King and promised to assist with the rebirth of this troubled, largely black city.

Bob Johnson, the founder of Black Entertainment Television, apologized for comments he made at a Clinton campaign rally in South Carolina on Sunday that hinted at Obama's use of drugs as a teenager. Obama is running to be the first black president.

Johnson initially denied he was talking about Obama's drug use, saying he was referring to the Illinois senator's days as a community organizer.

Johnson backed away from that explanation Thursday, two days after Hillary Clinton said during a nationally televised debate that she considered his comments "out of bounds."

"In my zeal to support Senator Clinton, I made some very inappropriate remarks for which I am truly sorry," Johnson said in a written statement.

"I hope that you will accept this apology. Good luck on the campaign trail."

Johnson's comments and remarks by both Clintons before the New Hampshire primary last week had alarmed several black leaders and drew a rebuke from Obama and his top aides.

It began when Hillary Clinton gave an interview in which she seemed to discount King's role in the civil rights movement. Later, former President Clinton cast aspects of Obama's candidacy as a "fairy tale."

Obama and Clinton later called a truce in the controversy, and Clinton offered another olive branch Thursday when asked whether she would consider choosing Obama as her vice presidential running mate.

"I can't think that far ahead because it's bad luck, I'm very superstitious, and I don't want to be presumptuous," she said. "But he is an extraordinary man and has so much to give our country. I hope however this works out he will be a major figure in American politics for years and years to come."

Johnson's apology and Clinton's visit to Compton was her latest effort to reconnect with the black community after she and Obama engaged in a bitter exchange of words over the issue of race.

BRITISH AIRWAYS JET
CRASH-LANDS; 19 HURT

LONDON — A British Airways jet from Beijing carrying 152 people crash-landed Thursday, injuring 19 people and causing more than 200 flights to be canceled at Europe's busiest airport.

Investigators will speak to the pilots and study the plane's flight data recorder and maintenance records to determine what caused the crash-landing at Heathrow airport, tearing the plane's underbelly and damaging its wings.

Nothing suggested it was terror-related, Scotland Yard said.

Fire trucks surrounded the Boeing 777 after it landed, spraying fire retardant foam around the aircraft. Two of the plane's giant wheel units were ripped from the craft during the landing and could be seen on grass near the runway.

SUICIDE BOMBER TARGETS
IRAQI SHIITES

BAGHDAD — A suicide bomber struck Shiites as worshippers prepared Thursday for their most important holiday, killing at least 11 at a mosque in violent Diyala province — one day after a similar attack by a woman in a nearby village.

Police and eyewitnesses said one of the victims had intercepted the bomber when he saw him making his way through the crowd. "Stranger, stranger," he shouted as he grabbed the bomber, who instantly detonated the blast.

A spike in bombings in recent weeks is chipping away at security gains made over the past six months, when levels of violence dropped nationwide. Many of the attacks have targeted Sunnis who have turned against the main insurgent group, al-Qaida, in Iraq.

Authorities fear the Shiite religious events — marking the death of a 7th century Shiite saint — could increasingly fall into the crosshairs of Sunni extremists.

ISLAMIC MILITANTS SEIZE PAKISTAN FORT

DERA ISMAIL KHAN, Pakistan — In an embarrassing battlefield defeat for Pakistan's army, Islamic extremists attacked and seized a small fort near the Afghan border, leaving at least 22 soldiers dead or missing.

The insurgents later abandoned the fort and melted away into the hills, said military spokesman Maj. Gen. Athar Abbas. "There is no occupation of the Sararogha Fort. Militants have gone from there," he said.

The militants did not gain significant ground, but they did further erode confidence in the U.S.-allied government's ability to control the frontier area where the Taliban and al-Qaida flourish.

SELF-DESTRUCTING PALM TREE DISCOVERED IN MADAGASCAR

ANTANANARIVO, Madagascar — A self-destructing palm tree that flowers once every 100 years and then dies has been discovered on the Indian Ocean island of Madagascar, botanists said Thursday.

The name of the giant palm and its remarkable life cycle will be detailed in a study by Kew Gardens scientists in the Botanical Journal of the Linnean Society published Thursday.

"It's spectacular. It does not flower for maybe 100 years, and when it's like this, it can be mistaken for other types of palm," said Mijoro Rakotoarivivo, who works for the London botanical gardens in Madagascar.

"But then a large shoot, a bit like an asparagus, grows out of the top of the tree and starts to spread. You get something that looks a bit like a Christmas tree growing out of the top of the palm," he said.

The branches of this shoot then become covered in hundreds of tiny white flowers that ooze with nectar, attracting insects and birds.

POLICE STEP UP PRESSURE ON KENYAN PROTESTERS

NAIROBI, Kenya — Police cracked down fiercely on a second day of protests across Kenya on Thursday, firing bullets at opposition supporters and tear gas at a hospital. At least five people were killed.

The United States blamed President Mwai Kibaki and opposition leader Raila Odinga for the violent demonstrations and ethnic clashes that have killed more than 600 Kenyans since a disputed Dec. 27 presidential vote. Kibaki insists he won the election, but international and local observers say the vote count was rigged.

"It is beyond time for them to come together and open those channels of communication and focus all of their efforts on trying to reach a political accommodation," State Department spokesman Sean McCormack said.

'Wilson's War' one of year's best films

"Walk Hard: The Dewey Cox Story"

Reviews by Brendan Praeger

After enduring the relentless stupidity of recent spoof films like "Epic Movie" and "Date Movie," I expected "Walk Hard: The Dewey Cox Story" to set the bar a little higher.

"Walk Hard" takes aim at recent music biopics like "Walk the Line" and "Ray," by following the fictional career of Dewey Cox through the past few decades.

John C. Reilly plays the title character from age 14 on, and it's a great performance by a tragically underused actor.

Reilly also performs the bulk of the film's soundtrack. Most of the tunes are catchy, but the attempts at punk rock and rap fall flat.

Most of the scenes are ripped directly out of "Walk the Line," and the novelty wears off quickly.

The jokes are hit and miss, and the ones that are funny are beaten to death by the time the credits roll.

Listening to Dewey's father say "the wrong kid died" is only slightly funny the first time, and it's almost painful by the 20th.

As a comedy, "Walk Hard" isn't a complete waste. A constant parade of cameos keeps things interesting.

The scene with The Beatles alone will be worth the price of a rental once the DVD comes out in a few months.

If "Walk Hard" would have treated its genre with respect rather than ridicule, then it could have ended up in the pile of great spoof films with "Shaun of the Dead" and "Blazing Saddles." Instead, it ends up just a notch above "Scary Movie."

"Charlie Wilson's War"
★★★★☆

Political thrillers can be dangerous ground for filmmakers. Too much jargon can bore the audience, and endorsing specific policies can run the risk of alienating audience members with a variety of political views.

In "Charlie Wilson's War," director Mike Nichols takes a more comedic approach to the world of politics.

Charlie Wilson (Tom Hanks) is a Texas congressman whose achievements include lots of drinking and getting re-elected.

When the communists invade Afghanistan, he teams up with a CIA operative (Philip Seymour Hoffman) and a Texas millionaire (Julia Roberts) to conduct a covert war.

The plot, based on a true story, provides a wonderful playground for writer Aaron Sorkin, who worked on both "The West Wing" and "An American President."

While Roberts' acting seems to lack enthusiasm, Hanks and Hoffman both hit all of the right notes. Hoffman deserves to be on more of the year-end awards lists. His cynical performance is as good as any in his career and provides reason enough to recommend the movie to anyone.

The pacing is wonderful, and the plot shifts focus at the end to reveal several mistakes the United States made when leaving Afghanistan.

It gives the audience something to think about while leaving the theater, but it never seems forced or out of place.

"Charlie Wilson's War" is easily one of the year's best. Catch it while you still can.

"I Am Legend"

"I Am Legend," a mainstream movie that relies heavily on special effects, seems a bit out of place in theaters at this time of year. Most big-budget action and horror films show up during the summer, but Will Smith's latest adventure entertains enough to justify its Oscar-season release date.

Smith plays Robert Neville, a military scientist living alone in New York City. After a cure for cancer goes bad and infects most of the human race, Neville works alone to find a cure while evading "dark seekers," violent humans infected by the virus. The plot evolves through several flashbacks and unconventional storytelling methods. Newspaper clippings in abandoned homes help the audience piece together the events we never see on-screen. The scenes of Neville roaming the city are impressive. The attention to detail, from the artwork in Neville's apartment to the weeds growing in the streets make it easy to immerse yourself in the film's environment.

Unfortunately, the computer-animated monsters are less believable. Their human qualities have been stripped away to barely resemble their former selves. This might disappoint fans of Richard Matheson's novel, on which the film is loosely based, but it keeps the focus on Neville rather than his enemies.

Although the ending lacks the power of the rest of the story, it's good enough to make "I Am Legend" one of the most exciting movies of the year.

"Sweeney Todd: The Demon Barber of Fleet Street"
★★★★☆

The prospect of a murderous barber played by Johnny Depp was enough to get me into the theater, but in the end, "Sweeney Todd" fell well short of my expectations.

Depp plays Sweeney Todd, a barber looking for revenge after an evil judge (Alan Rickman) sends him to prison and steals his daughter.

He teams up with Mrs. Lovett (Helena Bonham Carter) to grind his victims into delicious meat pies.

Originally based on a Broadway musical by Stephen Sondheim, the premise seems perfect for director Tim Burton.

"Sweeney Todd" is his sixth film with Depp, and every second of the film shows off his dark atmosphere and visual wizardry.

Despite wonderful performances, the plot takes a long time to get going. The action picks up once the killing begins, but I felt bored at too many points before the end.

The songs also began to grate on my nerves. They're mostly well done, but I'm usually not a fan of musicals, so it might be personal taste rather than quality that turned me away. I can only recommend "Sweeney Todd" to Broadway fans with strong stomachs.

ENTERTAINMENT BRIEFS

MATTHEW MCCONAUGHEY TO BE A DAD

Matthew McConaughey and girlfriend Camila Alves are expecting a child, the actor announced Tuesday on his Web site.

"My girlfriend Camila and I made a baby together," McConaughey writes. "It's three months growin' in her womb, and all looks healthy and lively so far. We are stoked and wowed by this miracle of creation and this gift from God, and so excited for the adventure that will come in raising this child, being a mother and a father, and shepherding him or her through this life."

BRAD RENFRO'S FORMER LAWYER: 'WE ALL FAILED'

An autopsy is planned for Thursday to determine what caused troubled actor Brad Renfro's untimely death, Los Angeles County coroner officials said.

Meanwhile, his former lawyer spoke out, saying the news left her in tears.

Former Renfro defense attorney Blair Berk, who routinely represents celebs battling substance abuse (including Lindsay Lohan and Mel Gibson), said there's something particularly tragic and disturbing about the talented actor's death at such a young age.

"As critical and prescient as you become in this town, all I did was cry when I heard the news," Berk said. "I feel in some respects like we all failed."

BRITNEY SPEARS SEEN SHOPPING FOR PREGNANCY TEST

Britney Spears is making more news — with a trip to her local drug store.

The troubled pop star and mother of two was photographed shopping for a pregnancy test Tuesday at a local Rite Aid store in Studio City, Calif.

Photos show Spears and her new beau, 35-year-old photographer Adnan Ghalib, at the store together, and Spears scanning the shelves of pregnancy tests.

All told, it's been another week full of rumors involving Spears, who recently lost visitation rights with her two children, Jayden, 1, and Preston, 2, after being hospitalized.

As for a report that Spears had written a suicide note on the night of her meltdown, "There was no suicide note, and it's completely untrue that she tried to commit suicide," her longtime friend Sam Lutfi said. "She is not suicidal."

MARION JONES OPENS UP TO OPRAH ABOUT HER MISTAKES

In her first interview since being sentenced to six months in prison for lying about her steroid use and check fraud, Marion Jones accepts responsibility and said she has no regrets.

"I think that I absolutely should have to accept responsibility for breaking the law," she says on the Oprah Winfrey Show in an episode airing Wednesday.

"I have no regrets for doing what I did on October the 5th and pleading guilty and admitting to the world that I lied, that I've made mistakes."

After her October admission, Marion was stripped of her Olympic medals — something much easier to deal with than the pain of upsetting her loved ones, she said.

Renowned country artist to perform at Longhorns Saloon

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Country artist Randy Rogers usually can be found in one of two places: on the road or performing a live show.

Despite playing more than 250 shows last year, members of the Randy Rogers Band found time to write a new album they hope will be released sometime this year.

The group plays at 10 p.m. Friday at Longhorn's Saloon for its semi-annual stop in Manhattan.

The band is also getting ready to record its first album away from its home in Austin, Tex. and it's leader, Randy Rogers, recently answered questions ranging from his new album to his tour location.

Q: Why aren't you guys record- ing in Austin?

A: We are recording in Lafayette, La., to get away from all the distractions in Austin.

We all live there, and there is a lot of things that can distract us all.

We are going to Louisiana just to get away from all of that.

Q: Has the album already been written?

A: We have 15 songs or so that we want to cut, and we've written about 30 or so songs for the record.

Q: What happens to the songs that you don't use for the record?

A: We will keep them for next time or pitch them to somebody else.

Q: Do you write a lot of your own songs?

A: We wrote every one that's on this record.

Q: Do you write songs with anyone else?

A: Our guitar and bass players both write, and I typically do the majority of the writing.

Q: What's your favorite song you've ever written?

A: A song called "This Time Around"

Q: Why?

A: I wrote it with Cody Canada from Cross Canadian Ragweed, and it's kind of a pissed-off, angry song about how somebody screwed you over.

I like the emotion that is behind it.

Q: Do you do a lot with Cross Canadian Ragweed?

A: We play several shows with them a year, and we're all good friends. We see them a lot.

Q: What about Jason Boland?

A: We just toured with Jason. Jason and I did a lot of acoustic shows around Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Q: Where do you tour most?

A: We tour the Midwest and the Southeast.

You know, Texas and Oklahoma is where we live but we've tried to expand and tour all over the country the past couple of years.

Q: When you're picking places to play, how do you balance the new venues with the old?

A: About three times a year, I guess, we come through Manhattan.

You know, we try to expand year after year as much as we can.

Q: How much longer do you think you'll tour?

A: That's the goal, man. To make music, make records and tour for the rest of our lives.

Q: Is there anybody you haven't worked with yet that you would like to?

A: The producer Rick Rubin.

RCPD | Police plan to build extra cells to combat crowding

last year. The current estimate is $3.5 million to $3.8 million, and commissioners said they expect the cost to continue to rise.

"The law says we have to provide the space, and (they are) telling us (they) need it," said Bob Newsome, vice chair of the Board of County Commissioners.

Local architects Bruce McMillan and Dan Rowe are in charge of designing the addition, which will solve several problems.

RCPD Captain Jeff Hooper said the new facility will include 32 beds. Ten will serve as medical cells, ten will be special-needs cells, and twelve will function as maximum-security cells.

RCPD Director Bradley Schoen said one reason the jail is running out of room is because criminals are not permitted to live in cells with other criminals convicted of different offenses.

"An inmate has to be classified according to a certain criteria when they come in," said Schoen. "The degree of danger they pose to the staff and each other, whether they have histories of violence and the type of offense they committed [are all factors]."

Hooper explained that the maximum-security areas are full, so some inmates normally kept in a maximum-security area are in a medium-security area.

This also affects the medium security prisoners, forcing them into an area of minimum security.

Rowe said the facility will be completed without having to move inmates, which was one of Hooper's primary concerns.

Hooper explained to the board that the overall population of the jail has exceeded the population projected a few years ago.

"It's fuller than projections supposed they would be in this point in its life," Schoen said. "We're bumping up against the number that we can reasonably hold."

The addition will be voted on at a Law Enforcement Agency meeting at noon on Tuesday in City Hall.

A man was charged with felony possession and sale of marijuana after Riley County Police found and confiscated the drug from his apartment.

Marwin Lee Hudge, 21, was arrested on Jan. 18 after police searched his apartment at 1412 Beechwood Terrace, Apt. 8, in Manhattan. This search warrant was the result of an ongoing investigation of marijuana distribution in the Manhattan area, according to a Riley County police report.

Hudge is charged with two counts of selling marijuana, felony possession of marijuana, two counts of unlawful acquisition of drug proceeds, the unlawful use of a telecommunication device, and is charged for not having a Kansas drug tax stamp, according to the police report.

Hudge's bond is set at $15,000.

Employee steals $6000 from Sears

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A former Sears employee was charged Jan. 17 with stealing $6,165 worth of merchandise from the Sears store in the Manhattan Town Center, according to Lt. Kurt Moldrup of the Riley County Police Department.

Eric Batchman allegedly stole miscellaneous household goods, electronic equipment and power and hand tools from Sears over a period of about four and a half months - from Aug. 4, 2007 to Jan. 17, 2008, Moldrup said.

Batchman allegedly stole items directly from the store and also made false refunds to put money on gift cards, which he then used to buy items from the store, Moldrup said.

He said the RCPD was able to recover most of the stolen items from Batchman's home.

$1.8 million grant funds pathogen research

A tick-borne bacteria that garners a wide biological application has brought more than $1.8 million in federal research funding to K-State.

The National Institutes of Health awarded the grant to Roman Ganta, professor of diagnostic medicine and pathology in December. Ganta said he and his research team aim to find broad biological models with the vector-borne bacteria Ehrlichia chaffeensis.

Vector-borne pathogens interest Ganta because they are evolved, he said. The pathogens must live in vectors as well as vertebrates like humans, dogs and cattle, Ganta said. This adaptation is

KSU Horse Judging team wins world championship

By Ryne Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When, most people think of successful K-State team, one of the basketball teams or the volleyball team might come to mind. However, there is one successful team not even in the realm of athletics that often goes unnoticed. It is the KSU Horse Judging team.

Horse judging is a competition based on overall points, and competitors receive those points by ranking and giving reasons to support those rankings.

The KSU Horse Judging team has been one of the most successful K-State teams this year. How successful? How about world champions. The team won the title at the American Quarter Horse Association World Championship Show collegiate team-judging competition in Oklahoma City in November 2007, earning K-State a world championship.

"Extremely proud," said Julie Voge, the team's coach, of winning the world championships. "It's a great feeling to know that you have been involved with nine students that have worked their butts off all year and came away with a great victory."

THE TEAM

This year the team had nine members: Kindra Gradert, Leo Becker, Billy Brown, Heather Frisch, Kaitlyn Crow, Kally Hood, Kayla Lee, Anna Pesta and Rachel Sherck.

They work year round to improve their skills and it shows, Voge said.

"Some schools go there and kind of show up," Voge said. "It is reflected in the overall score."

She also said that Colorado State, West Texas A&M, Middle Tennessee State and Texas Tech are some of the main competitors every year. This year, K-State beat the second-place team by 92 points in the world championship.

Ice-T engages audience with personal stories for MLK Day

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Rapper/actor Ice-T speaks as part of the Alpha Phi Alpha Martin Luther King Jr. candlelight vigil celebration in Forum Hall.

Tracy Marrow, better known as the gangster rapper and actor Ice-T, endorsed Barack Obama, told the story of his early gang days and confessed his love for all-things bootlegged Monday night in Forum Hall.

Marrow was the keynote speaker at the annual Alpha Phi Alpha lecture remembering the life and civil rights achievement of Martin Luther King Jr. Day and candlelight vigil Monday night in Forum hall.

The lecture started at 7:30 but a line stretching up a flight of stairs and past the food court showed the general public was anxious to see the star speak.

Marrow became famous as a west-coast rapper and later built on that fame by appearing in movies like "New Jack City" and TV shows including "Law & Order: Special Victims Unit."

Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity received help from the Union Program Council, Leadership Studies & Programs and the Student Governing Association - who gave the $20,000 needed to bring the star in.

"We thought he would deliver a strong message," said Careem Gladney, senior in finance and president of the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity. "He had a troubled past being a former gang member and an orphan. So we thought that he would be able to give motivating words to college students."

Though his rap career is no longer Marrow's main focus, his on-stage persona has not changed much over the years. The same contempt for police brutality and the government still shines through, and Marrow now has calm, almost respectful statements to make about the law-enforcement community.

"I respect cops," Marrow said. "'Cop Killer' [Marrow's controversial gangster-rap song, released in 1992] wasn't a record against police, it was a record against police brutality."

Marrow said he chose to make the album a rock record because he felt the message of the song was geared toward the rock genre.

The controversial rock album released by Marrow band Body Count entitled "Cop Killer," was also a topic Marrow discussed.

Other topics addressed by the rapper included everything from advice to parents to insights on the personal life of former rapper and friend, Tupac Shakur.

One mother asked Marrow what he would say to her young son who is torn between two different groups of friends.

"I know this sounds corny," Marrow said, "but listen to your mother. She might be the only person that loves you one day."

Even though Marrow was speaking in remembrance of Dr. King, the main topics seemed to be the career and life of the rapper.

Despite the lack of discussion of serious modern day civil rights movements, the crowd was receptive of the message being conveyed by Marrow.

In a historic decision, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in Roe v. Wade that women, as part of their constitutional right to privacy, can terminate a pregnancy during its first two trimesters. Only during the last trimester, when the fetus can survive outside the womb, would states be permitted to regulate abortion of a healthy pregnancy.

The controversial ruling, essentially reversing a century of anti-abortion legislation in the United States, was the result of a call by many American women for control over their own reproductive processes. Although defended by the Supreme Court on several occasions, the legalization of abortion became a divisive and intensely emotional public issue.

1556: DEADLIEST EARTHQUAKE ROCKS CHINA

On this day in 1556, an earthquake in Shaanxi, China, killed an estimated 830,000 people. Counting casualties is often imprecise after large-scale disasters, especially prior to the 20th century, but this disaster is still considered the deadliest of all time.

The quake struck in late evening, with aftershocks continuing through the following morning. The magnitude of the quake was approximately 8.0 to 8.3, which isn't close to the strongest tremor on record. However, the quake struck in the middle of a densely populated area with poorly constructed buildings and homes, resulting in a horrific death toll.

Community celebrates MLK Week with local performances

Committee provides memorial service featuring musical entertainment, awards Saturday night at Manhattan High

Shoppers enjoy groups' live music, dancing shows in food court Monday at the Manhattan Town Center

Richard Pitts, Sylvia Beeman and Patricia Brown Barnett, Manhattan residents, play their djembes Saturday evening at Manhattan High East Campus Auditorium. The event was part of the Martin Luther King Jr. community celebration service.

The Manhattan Martin Luther King Memorial Committee celebrated Martin Luther King Jr. Day of remembrance with a Saturday night service at Manhattan High's East Campus Auditorium.

Jim Spencer, chairman of the committee, and other members organized a plethora of entertainers. He said organizing the event took many hours of preparation.

"We work hard all year long," Spencer said. "We started planning in April 2007."

A percussion performance started off the show. As the night progressed, several more forms of talent were demonstrated.

Andy Bell played the alto saxophone while accompanied by Greg Stephens on piano. They played "Amazing Grace" and Grover Washington Jr.'s "Sad Song."

"I really appreciate the opportunity to come out and be a part of the celebration," Bell said.

Following Bell was a band performance by The Incorporated Windsock Quartet.

"I think everybody enjoyed it," said Aliyah Stephens, lead vocalist and guitarist of the group. "I thought we picked appropriate songs."

Stephens said the group formed more than a year ago and now tours Aggieville bars with 10 to 15 original songs.

Spencer said he thought the highlight of the show was the speech given by Diversity Coordinator for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 Tiffany Powell.

Powell spoke about discrimination in schools between teachers and students. She said discrimination still exists and that one of her goals as diversity coordinator was to eradicate the problem. After the speech, she answered several questions from the audience.

Stephanie Sharp of the Manhattan Christian College Dancers took the stage next and showed off her dancing talents, followed by a poem read by Spencer.

After the event, members of the committee and attendees participated in a lighted candle memorial walk to the First Lutheran Church. The walk commemorated the civil rights marches led by King.

Expressions of Praise from the Fellowship Temple perform one of their four numbers for Martin Luther King Jr. Day at 10 a.m. Monday at the Manhattan Town Center. The group practices at least twice a month for performances in the community.

Drums and loud music might have distracted curious shoppers at the Manhattan Town Center on Monday. The Manhattan Martin Luther King Memorial Committee organized an event to celebrate the national holiday with music, dancing, singing and a variety of other shows of talent.

The theme for the event was "A Day On, Not A Day Off." The event began at 10 a.m. in the mall food court and continued until 4 p.m.

Twenty to 30 people attended at the beginning, and by 11, about 100 people had stopped to enjoy the musical performances.

"It's more crowded than past years," said Kathy Swenson, first grade teacher at Manhattan-Ogden USD 383.

Swenson said she attends the event every year and occasionally has students involved.

One of the notable performances was by a group called Expressions of Praise. The group danced to a few songs with painted-white faces in a style that represented emotional extremes.

"It was very involving," Swenson said.

Several other dance groups performed throughout the day, each with a different style.

At about midday, several awards were announced.

Author Geraldine Walton received one of two Spirit of Martin Luther King Service Awards presented by James Hardy, trustee of the Manhattan Community Foundation.

"Anyone who's anyone in Manhattan knows Gerry Walton," Hardy said during the announcement.

Walton said she learned the importance of community early in her life and she knew she wanted to make something of herself.

"All you have to do is keep trying," Walton said during her acceptance speech.

The other recipient was the Rev. Don Fallon. Fallon said it came as a surprise to him that he was chosen for the award.

He served K-State's campus as a minister for 30 years before retiring in May 2007.

The winners of the King Art and Essay Contest also were announced. Only 17 submitted were selected out of 250 entries.

"This is a very important event for the community," Swenson said. "It lets you revitalize every year."

Everyone can probably agree that an extra-long weekend is always enjoyable even though we've only been to two days of our spring-semester classes.

MISS | WEATHER

No one was probably able to enjoy the long weekend because of the cold weather. At least we don't live in Green Bay, Wis. where the Packers and the New York Giants played the NFC championship game in sub-zero degree weather.

HIT | MLK GARDEN

After seeing the Collegian story about the Coretta Scott King Gardens of Engagement, a few people called to find out how to make a donation.

MISS | HOSKINS INJURY

Senior forward David Hoskins will miss the rest of the season to have knee surgery. Hopefully he can make a full recovery and maybe even play basketball again.

First man atop Everest

Famous explorer bettered the world with generosity

When Sir Edmund Hillary died earlier this month, the world lost not only a brave adventurer but a humanitarian and inspiring personality.

To some, Hillary is known only for the first line of his Jan. 11 obituary in The New York Times: on May 29, 1953, he and Nepalese climber Tenzing Norgay became the first humans known to reach the summit of Mount Everest at 29,035 feet above sea level.

On Jan. 11, The London Times reported Hillary was a citizen of New Zealand by birth and a beekeeper by trade. He was a towering man — 6 feet, 5 inches tall — whose physical accomplishments rightfully earned him the title of world explorer. According to his book, "The Ascent of Everest," by the time he climbed to the summit in 1953, he already had scaled 11 other peaks of more than 20,000 feet in the Himalayas. He crossed Antarctica and reached the South Pole in 1958, and wrote about the experience in his book, "No Latitude for Error." In 1985 he landed a plane at the North Pole and became the first man to complete the hat trick of standing at both poles and the top of Everest.

Besides conquering Earth's most hazardous climates, Hillary also chose to fill his life with service to others. He was a member of the Royal New Zealand air force during World War II; New Zealand's ambassador to India, Bangladesh and Nepal; president of his country's Peace Corps; and founder of the Sir Edmund Hillary Himalayan Trust.

Hillary's forgotten legacy — and maybe his most important — was his role as a conservationist and philanthropist. His efforts led Nepal to establish the area surrounding Mount Everest as a national park. The London Times reported his foundation built 26 schools, more roads and health clinics in Nepal.

Hillary has been the hero of ambitious mountain climbers the world over, as well as children who learn his name and would-be adventurers who live in nature and attempt to tame it. But Hillary probably hoped he would be remembered for the mountain he worked so hard to preserve, by the schoolchildren who study in the buildings his foundation built and in honor of his respect for the environment.

Hillary, humble and hardworking, showed us big achievements are not out of reach. Few of us will climb the world's highest mountain or accomplish similar feats of incredible strength and endurance, but whatever our goals and aspirations, Hillary emphasized the most important factors in success are desire and personal commitment. He reminded us that, "It is not the mountain we conquer, but ourselves."

He used his fame as a renowned explorer not to advance his own particular agenda but to raise awareness of the social, economic, environmental and health conditions in Nepal. After Hillary reached the top of Everest in May 1953, doing what so many had called impossible, his journey had just begun. It is for a lifetime of achievement — the work that came after his grueling conquest of that great mountain — that he is even more deserving of our respect.

Sir Edmund Hillary died of a heart attack in New Zealand on Jan. 11. He was 88.

Strike to blame for cancelled award shows

It's been called the biggest party of the year, but this year's Golden Globe Awards was anything but. Usually filled with celebrities in outfits that would make Frank Sinatra look unprofessional, the Golden Globes wasn't even a show — it was a news conference. Celebrities were not present.

Grateful directors didn't accept awards with tear-filled eyes and thank-you lists as long as toilet paper rolls.

The awards and their recipients were read off in a quick and professional manner. No red carpet, no Joan Rivers — just an hour of unceremonious presentation.

This marks the first great battle of the writers' strike, resulting in a veritable standstill of Hollywood activity.

With the backbone of the entertainment industry standing in picket lines and writing scathing blog entries, there was no one to fill in the blanks, to write intros or any of the other speeches award shows are usually filled with.

This is big news; it's just that the people who would normally tell you about it are, well, writers.

And there certainly has not been much writing going on.

No one can tell how long this will last, or how long it will take for one side to give in to the other. One thing is certain in Hollywood though — the fate of the Oscars is in grave danger.

The greatest award show on non-cable TV could suffer the worst blow in its history.

Last year it was announced that the Oscars were "going green." This year it seems they will be going nowhere.

But what about the shows that are somehow still running, like "The Daily Show" or "The Late Show with David Letterman"? Letterman's production company signed a strike waiver, according to TimeOnline.com, and "The Daily Show" is running without writers and makes almost constant cracks about the lack of direction.

It would seem this couldn't last much longer. Huge amounts of money are being lost daily on each side of the picket line. The studios have to be getting queasy, and for the most part the writers will actually be hungry soon.

The Oscars probably will go on as they have for the past 80 years, though deals will have to be made while this is going on — as writers don't make money and producers lose it — as we learn it shows us that everyone, big and small, is mad about something.

The term "strike" normally conjures images of the Teamsters and steel mill workers marching up and down the streets trying to make life a little better for themselves and their families.

It is odd to see familiar names and faces doing the same.

So until the time comes when TV and movies are cranked out once more and one side is happier than the other, we will have to deal with other forms of entertainment.

In some selfish way, it's kind of nice to see Hollywood get kicked in the teeth now and again.

Popular Aggieville coffeehouse displays local artists' talent

By Joe Vossen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At Radina's Coffeehouse and Roastery, the java shop in Aggieville that's faithful clientele calls comfortable and cool, the draw is more than great coffees and breads.

Radina's features different artists each month, displaying their work prominently on the walls. Pieces can be admired and purchased by customers.

Artist Fred Rohs, a native of Manhattan, is showcasing his art at Radina's. Rohs graduated from K-State in 1993 with a bachelor's degree in fine arts, and now lives in Maryville, Mo., with his wife.

Rohs said art has been a lifelong passion for him. He said he has been drawing and sketching since he was old enough to hold a pencil. He said the art of the 2-D surface always has been his main interest, and paint became his favorite medium. Through the years, he said his art has been shown in a variety of unorthodox venues.

"My work has also been shown at other coffee shops, an optometry office and galleries in Kansas City and Maryville," he said. "I operated my own gallery here in Maryville for about three years."

Stepping into Radina's, it is hard not to notice his paintings. The pieces, some several feet in height, stand out with striking colors and unusual images. Rohs is hesitant to categorize his art, but says he sometimes calls his works "nonrepresentational optical art."

"People want to call it abstract art, but abstract art actually starts with realism, something tangible, and in my art I really don't start with any main object," Rohs said. "I think you can see that in my paintings and their titles. They're very unrevealing."

Most of his works on display at Radina's are acrylics painted on canvas. A few pieces on paper and one oil painting also can be seen. With such visual complexity in his work, it is no surprise how much time and energy Rohs invests.

"I do each painting by hand — it can be pretty meticulous. One of the larger paintings took me about 200 hours," he said. "I try to make [my art] visually striking. I try to take the shapes and images I layer and use color and composition to make it visually interesting. There is an initial impact of colors that jump at you, but then you notice other things about it you didn't initially."

Rohs cited painters Josef Albers, Larry Poons, and Wassily Kandinsky as artistic inspiration. In addition, certain styles have played a role in his development as an artist, he said.

"I've always been drawn to graphic art, comic books, graphic advertising and pop art and that comes through in my paintings," he said.

Annette Radina, wife of the coffeeshop's owner Wade Radina, said the artists chosen to display their work each month are a mix of alumni, students and community members.

"We just want to give people a chance to show their work," she said. "There are a lot of artists out there who would like to show it but don't know where to go. We try to be accessible to as many people as possible."

The artists might appreciate the opportunity to show their work in public, but it is there for the customers to enjoy as well.

"This particular show is interesting," said Len McDonald, a Radina's regular. "It has a wonderful complexity and movement. The craftsmanship of these particular pieces is better than the norm."

The paintings of K-State alumnus Fred Rohs will be on display at Radina's through January.

Commission to vote on intersection construction, cheap housing tonight

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Commissioners will discuss intersection improvements and affordable housing development tonight at the city commission meeting.

The commissioners will vote on proposed improvements to the intersection at U.S. Highway 24 and Marlatt Avenue. The proposition includes dedicated turning lanes, traffic lights and the aligning of Marlatt Avenue according to the agenda.

Along with moving power, water and sewer lines, the proposition includes how much monetary compensation the city will appropriate to private citizens for the property that must be purchased to allow for the right of way because of the enlargement of the intersection, said Commissioner Bruce Snead.

"It has been a high-accident intersection," Snead said.

Other roads in town under development include Fort Riley Boulevard, Davis Drive and the intersection of Juliette and Bluemont Avenues, he said.

The second agenda item concerns the Manhattan Area Housing Partnership. The MAHP requests the city's support of the MAHP application to the State of Kansas for tax credits and other funding to build more affordable housing in Manhattan.

If approved, the MAHP will receive $1,227,000 from the state to build four duplexes to house a total of eight families who qualify as low income, Snead said.

He also said the units each will include three bedrooms and a two-car garage. The MAHP already has completed 12 homes and one apartment complex in the Manhattan area.

"I think it is very likely the commission will support the resolution as it has supported [MAHP] in the past," Snead said.

Snead also said he wanted the community to be aware that the commission will schedule a public hearing to discuss a bond proposal that would fund 39 special projects around Manhattan. The projects include street, sewer, and water-line improvements and development. The hearing will be on Feb. 5.

K-State claws past No. 9 A&M to 2-0 Big 12 record

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When senior guard Clent Stewart's over-the-back rebound nearly went in the hoop, that's when coach Frank Martin knew.

"When I saw him throw the ball over his shoulder and that ball almost goes in ... I turned to my staff and said, 'You know what, guys? I don't care what happens. We aren't losing tonight,'" Martin said.

After junior forward Andre Gilbert cleaned up the rebound with an easy layup, K-State (12-4, 2-0 Big 12 Conference) was looking at an 18-point lead over the No. 10 team in the country with less than two minutes left in regulation.

Three Wildcats finished the 75-54 rout in double figures: freshman forward Michael Beasley, who had 21 points; freshman forward Bill Walker, with 19 points; and Stewart, who chipped in 10. Walker's 19 points included five of 10 from beyond the arc and netted him a Big 12 Rookie of the Week honor for the second time this season.

"Bill has an incredible will," Martin said. "He's an unbelievable competitor. He's taken on the challenge of leading our basketball team right now. He's become our voice. He's doing a heck of a job of bringing it and practicing the right way and that's translating to success for him on the court and success for us."

The leading rebounder was senior guard Blake Young, who had nine rebounds.

"Blake plays with a lot of energy," Stewart said. "You can see his quickness on the court. When you're out there playing with guys who play that hard, you stick out like a sore thumb when you don't play as hard as them. He's all over the place for us, defensively and offensively. He's a senior, so he's been around, and he knows what to do and how to win the game."

Texas A&M (15-3, 1-2 Big 12) shot abysmally in the second half, only scoring 26 percent of the time from the floor, including one of six from 3-point range. The Aggies were led in scoring by junior forward Josh Carter, who had 13 points.

Also scoring in double figures were senior center Joseph Jones, who had 12 points, and sophomore guard Donald Sloan, who had 10. The Aggies' leading rebounder was freshman center DeAndre Jordan, who had six boards. Aggies' coach Mark Turgeon, who is a former player for the University of Kansas, said K-State outplayed his team in every facet.

"I thought K-State was unbelievable," Turgeon said. "I'll give K-State the credit: I don't know who could have beat them today. Today, they were as good as anyone we've ever played. We were focused and ready to play, and we couldn't finish in the second half. They're good at home,

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Coach Bietau pleased with team's effort in Georgia

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team began its 2008 spring season with some positive efforts at the Georgia Invitational.

"I thought we had some good performances," coach Steve Bietau said. "It was our last chance to get our act together before dual matches and to play without team scoring. I was generally pleased."

In doubles action, K-State's best performances came on the last day against Troy. Last year's top doubles team of senior Olga Klimova and junior Katerina Kudlackova registered an 8-1 win over Annabelle Bares and Stephanie Vieira evening their 2008 record at 1-1. In other matches, the teams of sophomore Natasha Vieira and senior Viviana Yrureta and freshmen Vanessa Cottin and Pauline Guemas were also victorious.

Sunday's results were in stark contrast to the doubles matches Friday and Saturday. Against Georgia and Mississippi State, K-State were swept by wide margins.

"I don't know that the performance changed a lot," Bietau said of the team's effort. "The level of competition was the main difference. It's important to remember that this is the first time out [this year] and the play is often ragged. The weekend's attitude was good but the quality of play needs to improve."

Freshman Antea Huljev provided the bright spot at singles for the Wildcats. Huljev, who hails from Velenje, Slovenia, defeated Troy's Arres Marine 7-5, 6-3 on Saturday.

On Sunday, she topped Mississippi State's Elizabeth Hall, 6-4, 6-0.

Despite her performance, Bietau said there is still much to be desired by her performance.

"I'm not very happy," Bietau said, "It's never a bad thing when you win two matches, and the play improved as the weekend went on. But the play can be much better."

The team must now prepare for the transition to dual matches from tournament play.

"The big difference will be the players not playing just for themselves," Bietau said, "When we start all duals, all points count for the team."

Three home matches also await the Wildcats, who have yet to play at home. The dual play action will begin at 10 a.m. Feb. 2 when Syracuse visits Ahearn Field House.

"We're always glad to play at home," Bietau said. "Ahearn's been good to us. We have a week to prepare, and hopefully we'll be ready to be go by then."

Bietau said the experience was beneficial to the overlying issues still facing the team.

"We have a long ways to go and - second - clearly have things to build on," he said. "It was just a good chance to get on the court and work. That was the main thing this weekend."

Dietz leads Cats to win over Buffs, reaches 1,000-point mark

It was a star-studded edition of K-State women's basketball as Brittany Spears and Whitney Houston were present for the game Saturday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

However, instead of being in the stands as celebrities, Spears and Houston participated in the game as members of the Colorado roster.

The Wildcats seemed to come out of the gate a little star-struck, shooting only two-of-10 in the first five minutes and 25 seconds, but quickly snapped out of it and outlasted Colorado, 67-60.

In a game where junior guard Shalee Lehning had 11 points and 11 rebounds in her eighth career double-double, it was senior guard Kimberly Dietz who led the Wildcats in scoring with 18 points and grabbing five defensive rebounds. Dietz has scored in double figures in her last five games, including in 14 of 17 games played this season.

Junior forward Marlies

Gibson was next in scoring for the Wildcats with 14 points and four rebounds and sophomore forward Ashley Sweat chipped in with 12 points and two rebounds.

Coach Deb Patterson said she felt Dietz had more of an effect on the game even though Lehning had the better stats.

"When the game needed a change, Kimberly was the one who stepped up," Patterson said. "Shalee was about a

Hoskins to undergo surgery

The report on Senior David Hoskins' knee is finally in: the senior forward will miss the rest of the season.

Hoskins, who injured his knee prior to this season while playing in a Pro-Am tournament in August, was going to be back in action at the beginning of the season, but re-injured his knee in practice in October. He will have meniscal transplant surgery Feb. 1 in Chicago.

The surgery is a new procedure and involves transplanting tissue from a dead body. A match for Hoskins knee has been found.

The expected time of recovery is eight months, according to a press release.

Last year for the Wildcats, Hoskins averaged 14.5 points per game and usually had almost six rebounds per game.

"This is an extremely sad day for David and for our basketball program," Wildcat coach Frank Martin said. "However, David will be in our thoughts and prayers as he goes through the surgery and the rehabilitation. He deserved better than this, but I am confident that he will grow and become a better person from this experience."

K-State junior Loren Groves set a school record in the women's weight throw Saturday when she threw for a distance of 69-22.50, eclipsing the previous mark by exactly nine inches.

Groves took first in the event, and teammates senior Laci Heller and sophomore Amanda Boor finished second and third respectively.

Junior Alexandra Gonzalez won the women's pole vault, and senior Lindsay Grigoriev won the shot put.

The men's team took seven titles Friday starting with junior Eric Thomas in the men's weight throw.

Competing in his first event as a member of the K-State track and field team, freshman Emmanuel Niezer took home the title for the long jump. Freshman Michael Healey followed with a win in the high-jump competition.

Junior Mike Myer finished first in the men's 60-meter, and sophomore Sam James finished first in the 600-yard dash.

K-State capped the day by placing first in the men's 4x400-meter relay, and junior Adam Fretwell took the individual prize for the pole vault.

K-State will compete next Saturday at the Conference Challenge in Lincoln, Neb.

PATHOGENS | K-State researchers use federal grant for bacteria, studies

important for the bacteria's survival, which means they have evolved with their adjustment to different host environments.

"This may be a common theme," Ganta said. "It's a common thread and a common approach that many of these vector-borne pathogens use. So that means we have a much wider application and understanding in having control methods if we know how the vector-borne pathogens have adapted to different host environments."

A vector-borne pathogen is transmitted by invertebrate hosts like ticks and mosquitos. The bacteria live inside the invertebrate and then are transmitted to vertebrate like dogs, cattle and humans, Ganta said.

Ehrlichia chaffeensis was discovered first in 1987 as a human pathogen, Ganta said. About 300-500 cases were diagnosed each year after the initial diagnosis, but those cases only represent the reported cases, he said.

Ganta said survey research in Missouri and Tennessee suggests that as many as 50,000 U.S. cases arise each year. It can kill about 3 percent of those infected; elderly, children and those with compromised immune systems can be infected severely, Ganta said.

"Not all of the cases are reported because most of the clinical symptoms of the disease are very similar to a typical viral infection," he said. "So people often don't know they have this particular pathogen infection."

Before the discovery of Ehrlichia chaffeensis in 1987, there were similar pathogens in animals like dogs and cattle, Ganta said. Because these pathogens can cause infection in humans as well, funding agencies' interest has increased, he said.

"But the bottom line is that we still have a lot to learn and more research needs to be done," Ganta said.

Ganta has researched vector-borne pathogens — his major focus — since 1990. He initially started his research on another animal pathogen called babesia, which ticks transmit to cattle. He also has researched malaria, a vector-borne pathogen from mosquitos to humans.

"That was the driving force initially," Ganta said. "I was interested in human infections transmitted."

Ganta received his doctorate in biochemistry from All India Institute of Medical Science in 1987. Molecular biology is a branch of biochemistry where Ganta said he expanded his research strengths.

During the last five years, Ganta's research team has worked with a different federal grant in collaboration with Keith Chapes, professor of biology. The grant also totaled about $1.8 million from the National Institutes of Health.

Research with the first grant is ongoing, and Ganta said researchers plan to approach federal agents for additional funding.

During the current five-year study, four graduate students, three postdoctoral students and two microbiologists will conduct research.

"This is a vehicle by which I can train several graduate students and the scientists," Ganta said. "We are developing a future force of scientists, so that means we are contributing not just for this project but for the professional development of a number of students and scientists."

Kendra Siebert, doctoral student in genetics and molecular biology, is developing a transposon-based element system. Transposon is a segment of DNA that is capable of inserting copies of itself into other DNA sites within the same cell, according to the Random House Unabridged Dictionary.

With her particular research focus, Siebert said she aims to identify within the bacteria what gives them the ability to adapt and survive within different host environments.

Using a broad approach and genetic protein blueprint, Siebert said she wants to find how the bacteria are able to survive. Ganta said if Siebert's research makes a mutation, it failed to make one of the functional proteins, which means that the bacteria no longer grows in the ticks.

"You can have a mutation that will grow in one of the cell backgrounds, but it won't grow in another," Siebert said.

Siebert's research uses a random process to find the necessary proteins. She said the proteins can be used as a mechanism to stop growths in their life cycles.

"I'm still in the initial stages of trying to get the system to work," she said. "I haven't found any mutations yet."

JUDGING | Diversity, recruiting brought team to championship

The overall dynamics of the group was diverse with two team members from out-of-state, Gradert from Cambridge, Ill., and Pesta from Oakboro, N.C. However, the majority of the team is comprised of students in the agriculture department. Sherck, junior in English, is the only member majoring outside of the department. But the team wasn't one that let those differences get in the way of winning.

"Everybody really did make a big effort to help everyone get better," Sherck said. "That just created an atmosphere that helps me learn."

WORLD CHAMPIONSHIP

The team overall won the world championship, but there was one individual who rose above the rest and won the individual world championship — Gradert.

The Illinois native found her way to K-State through Black Hawk College: East Campus, which is known for horse judging. She placed first overall in Oklahoma City, beating out teammate Sherck for the award of World Champion.

"I was excited that everyone did so well," Gradert said of the world championships. "It was definitely one of the best things in my life."

Gradert, senior in animal science, grew up around horses, and she said horse judging became one of the most important things to her.

"It has been the most passionate thing in my life," she said. "This past fall, the thought that kept running through my mind was that I wish I could take the fall off [of classes] and only judge."

THE COACH

Voge has coached the horse judging team at K-State for 10 years, but this was her final year. She is leaving the team in the hands of Gradert and others to carry on the tradition, she said.

"We've been World Champion twice and reverse world champion twice," Voge said of the accomplishments of the team since she had been there.

Voge started judging horses at a young age. Her dad was her coach and stayed with it throughout her whole life. She, like Gradert, went to Black Hawk College: East Campus and then went on to Oklahoma State before coming to K-State to get her master's degree and coach.

Voge is the one in charge of recruiting — which is mainly with students on campus — and helping everyone on the team, whether it is getting acclimated to being away from home or just working with the horse judging team, said Gradert and Sherck.

That is why ending her coaching career on a high note is something that Voge said she really wanted.

"Since it was my last year here, I recruited pretty heavily to build a kind of legacy to end with," she said.

Though Voge is gone, she will be on the minds of her former judges.

"Julie Voge is by far one of the strongest women I have ever met," Gradert said. "She is a great coach and extremely smart. Having her as a friend and as a coach has been an extreme privilege."

Women | Cats impress Colorado coach with traits of Top-25 team

triple-double, but you didn't get the feeling she was dominating the game."

Before Saturday's game, Dietz was honored as the 33rd player in Wildcat women's basketball history to record 1,000 points in a K-State uniform. Dietz said the victory over the Buffaloes was a little bit sweeter for her, not only because it was her inaugural game after passing the 1,000 career points barrier, but because she is also a native of Boulder, Colo.

"No matter who it is, we just keep fighting," Dietz said. "It feels great to beat them since it was the school I grew up rooting for, but it was extra special because my family was able to be here."

The K-State women are on a seven-game winning streak and have started Big 12 Conference play 4-0 for the first time since the 2003-04 campaign, a season in which they went 14-2 in conference play.

Colorado coach Kathy McConnell-Miller said she hasn't seen all the top teams in the country, but based on the Wildcats' performance in Saturday's game, she said she has a strong opinion on where K-State stands compared to the best in the nation.

"KSU has the characteristics of a Top-25 team," McConnell-Miller said. "If you can go 4-0 in this league, you should be a Top-25 team."

K-State is off until Wednesday when the Wildcats are host to Iowa State and look to go 5-0 in the conference. The Cyclones raise big concerns for Patterson though they have been decimated by injuries so far this year.

"They are seasoned competitors," Patterson said. "It doesn't matter who's on the roster or who they lose — it's take one out, plug one in."

STRIKE | Lack of new TV material becoming old for strike supporters

"The negotiations did not break down over new media issues," according to the AMPTP statement. "Instead, the negotiations broke down primarily over one of the most old-fashioned issues of all: The desire of the WGA's organizers to increase their own power and prestige by expanding the jurisdiction of the union over reality television and animation writers. These jurisdictional expansion efforts have very little to do with the concerns of the working writers who are on strike."

The WGA strike has cost writers more than $220 million as of Monday afternoon, according to the AMPTP's Web site. The estimated losses are based on data that WGA West supplied on initial compensation paid to its members in 2006, according to the Web site.

The AMPTP Web site also estimates more than $380 million in wages lost for Los Angeles International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees crew members as of Monday afternoon. The crew members' losses are estimated from an analysis of contributions to Motion Picture Industry Pension and Health Plans, according to the Web site.

"We aren't replaceable," Rosenbaum said. "We have an innate talent and gift; you can't teach people what we do. We're the creators of the product."

VIEWS RESPOND

Leia Richards, freshman in life sciences and criminology, said the strike has affected her favorite TV shows like "Chuck," "Private Practice," "Jericho," "Grey's Anatomy" and "Friday Night Lights."

Richards, who supports the writers' strike, said people should inform themselves about the writers' strike because Internet TV is commonplace.

"The networks get most of the money from the shows that air, and the writers really don't get a lot of publicity for their work," she said. "With TV going toward the Internet these days, they should be getting paid for their jobs, which right now they're not. There's no show without the writers."

Elizabeth Tresemer, 15, started "Against the Writer's Strike" at www.freewebs.com/againstthestrrike on Jan. 9 to collect signatures and letters to send to CBS. While she supports the writers, Tresemer said she thinks the strike has gone too far.

"Of course they need to get their voices out, but I think they could have found a better way to get their opinions out," said Tresemer, a Stockport, Ohio, resident. "We just want our entertainment back. I've heard so many people say that they're tired of the reruns. People are getting discouraged that the seasons wouldn't be able to finish up."

Men | Coach Martin attributes fans with encouraging team toward win

they've got a road win. They'll be a factor in the Big 12. They'll be in the top of the league down the stretch."

K-State's 2-0 Big 12 record is the first time the Wildcats have gone undefeated through two league games since the inception of the conference in 1996. It's the first time K-State has been 2-0 in conference play since 1993, when K-State was part of the Big Eight Conference. Martin said the sold-out crowd of 12,528 really affected the game down the stretch during the second half.

"I've been at Louisville. I've been at Syracuse," Martin said. "These are schools that lead the country in attendance year in and year out. If there are better fans in the country over ours, I haven't been in that arena."

Guild, producers reach tentative agreement after 11-week strike

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Scott Rosenbaum put his pencil down 78 days ago.

Rosenbaum, co-executive producer of NBC's "Chuck," is one of about 12,000 members in the Writers Guild of America, West and the Writers Guild of America, East who went on strike and assumed picket duty on Nov. 5, 2007.

He said writers were asked to picket 15 hours a week at the strike's start, and he now pickets 12 hours a week. No picketing has taken place on Fridays; instead, Rosenbaum said Guild and strike-captain meetings take place. Writers also were assigned to groups of about 15 other writers and disseminated information among one another, Rosenbaum said.

"As writers, we're the creators of the content," Rosenbaum said. "What we've had to fight for very hard over the last 60 years is the right to, when something is created, we're able to share in some piece of the profit of it."

A TENTATIVE AGREEMENT

The Alliance of Motion Picture and Television Producers and the Directors Guild of America released a joint statement on Thursday about a tentative agreement.

"Our industry's creative talent will now participate financially in every emerging area of new media," according to a statement at www.amptp.org. "The agreement demonstrates beyond any doubt that our industry's producers are willing and able to work with the creators of entertainment content to establish fair and flexible rules for this fast-changing marketplace."

The Directors Guild of America's tentative agreement includes wage and residual increases, health-care contributions and other provisions affecting assistant directors, according to a fact sheet posted Thursday at www.dga.org.

The tentative agreement also addresses jurisdiction over new media, including original content, paid downloads and advertisement-supporting streaming. The tentative agreement's sunset provision would allow both sides to revisit new media when the agreement expires.

"We did it," wrote Thania St. John, WGA member since 1988, at unitedhollywood.blogspot.com on Monday. "We accomplished the impossible. We got the AMPTP back to the table and finally received a counter-proposal to the one we made them so many months ago. The deal they made with the DGA is the first true sign of negotiation they've shown since we started asking them to do so back in July."

A contract with the Alliance of Motion Picture and Television Producers covered the 12,000 WGA members. After more than

"We aren't replaceable. We have an innate talent and gift; you can't teach people what we do. We're the creators of the product."

AND LOS ANGELES RESIDENT

three months of negotiations that started in July 2007, the strike followed a gridlock with writers' insistence on an increase in their residuals payments, according to a New York Times Nov. 2, 2007, article.

The last industrywide writers' strike took place in 1988. The five-month writers' strike, which is the longest in history, affected TV and movie productions.

The WGA Negotiating Committee released a statement on Nov. 4, 2007, that said the companies insisted on the following re-loads at the DVD rate;

— No residual for streaming video of theatrical product;

— A "promotional" proposal that allows them to reuse even complete movies or TV shows on any platform with no residual;

— A "window" of free reuse on the Internet

"Because the Internet was not something that really existed in a form that people were making money off of it during the last contract negotiation, the writers had nothing in writing that said we'd be able to partake in residuals on the Internet or new media or have any creative rights," Rosenbaum said.

According to a Dec. 10, 2007, statement on AMPTP's Web site at www.amptp.org, various WGA spokespeople claimed the strike is about sharing the revenue from new-media markets.

MUSIC REVIEWS

Leftover 2007 albums provide oasis in first-of-the-year release drought

Reviews by Mark Sibilla

The first few months of the year often are a depressing time for entertainment. The awards season is in full swing, and studios and record companies already have released any movies or music of any worth in hopes they have created enough buzz to garner a coveted Golden Globe, Academy Award or Grammy.

Even with the absence of awards shows because of the Writer's Guild of America strike, the release schedules for January, February and March look pretty anemic as far as new music releases.

Instead of looking to the future, I propose looking to the past for some great albums from 2007 that barely missed my annual Top 10 list.

Here are five albums, in no particular order, that deserve a second look, and they ought to hold you over until the 2008 release schedule heats up in the spring.

FEIST, "THE REMINDER"

Canadian singer-songwriter Leslie Feist has made a splash in the indie-music world with her involvement in the indie-rock supergroup Broken Social Scene and the release of her ambitious 2004 album, "Let It Die." However, Feist began her journey to becoming a household name with her major-label debut,

"The Reminder." An eclectic journey through the talented mind of Feist, the album probably is best known for the single "1234," which was used to advertise a slew of fine consumer products. But if any song deserved to be beaten into the ground this year, it was this one with its perfectly orchestrated instrumentation, catchy hooks and of course, Feist's amazing voice. The rest of the album is just as amazing; listen to the piano-driven "My Moon My Man," the bouncy, Nina Simone-sampling "Sea Lion Woman" and the subdued beauty of "Brandy Alexander."

LCD SOUNDSYSTEM, "SOUND OF SILVER"

Half of the production duo known as the DFA and the mastermind behind LCD Soundsystem, James Murphy have been a mainstay on hipsters lips and playlists for the majority of this decade. After a number of excellent singles and creative remixes, Murphy continued to prove his brilliance with his self-titled debut released in 2005. By marrying the styles and sounds of rock and dance music, Murphy has created his second masterpiece with "Sound of Silver." The album is perfectly sequenced to always keep the energy high and the party bouncing. Every song is a winner, including the Brian Enos-inspired opener "Get Innocuous!," the rollicking, irony-filled "North American Scum," the touching song about losing a loved one, "Someone Great" and the coup de grace, "All My Friends" about a night-long party session reconnecting with old friends.

M.I.A., "KALA"

In 2005, multi-national rapper M.I.A. blasted onto the music scene with her extremely hyped debut, "Arular." Mixing world-music beats with her revolutionary politics, M.I.A. created an amazing album that deserved every good word written about it. "Kala," her 2007 follow-up, expands the sonic palette even further. M.I.A. recorded around the world for this album giving it a more diverse, less streamlined and more sonically-audacious sound. From the sampling of "Roadrunner" by the Modern Lovers for the clattering opener, "Bamboo Banga" to the ABBA-like synth runs in "Jimmy" to using The Clash's "Straight to Hell" in "Paper Planes," M.I.A. never sits still or settles on one particular style for very long. Such a busy album could be head-spinning, but it is held together by M.I.A.'s charismatic performance and talented delivery.

MODEST MOUSE, "WE WERE DEAD BEFORE THE SHIP EVEN SANK"

After a move to a major label with its last album, "Good News for People Who Love Bad News," many feared that the raucous Modest Mouse of old would forever be left behind in exchange for better production values and a sound tempered for mass consumption. However, as Isaac Brock and the rest of his band prove on "We Were Dead," old habits die hard. The band's arrangements are its most mature in its career, and the addition of former Smiths guitarist Johnny Marr fleshes out the band's sound, but Brock lets his freak flag fly at full staff on nearly every song. Though the album is too long by a couple songs, the band manages to fill it with enough gems to make it an absolute blast to listen to. From the danceable single, "Dashboard" to multi-part epics like "Parting of the Sensory" and "Spitting Venom" for which the band is best known, "We Were Dead" is an album Modest Mouse fans both old and new equally can enjoy.

PANDA BEAR, "PERSON PITCH"

Panda Bear (aka Noah Lennox) is one-quarter of the Brooklyn, N.Y., band Animal Collective. This album, which brings to mind an electronica album by LSD-fueled Beach Boys, contains seven immaculately sequenced songs of spacey, sample-filled bliss. It would have been interesting to have viewed the recording process, watching Lennox at his laptop carefully compiling samples and loops that run the gamut from serene to ecstatic. This album is more personal than the other albums on this list, meaning it sounds best on good headphones in the comfort of your home, but the album hardly sounds closed-off. Each song sounds like it was made especially for the listener with its meticulously crafted soundscapes and Lennox's beautiful harmonies that sound like he is whispering right into your ear through a sea of hazy reverberation.

A new company expects to offer more than 5,000 digital textbooks for students to buy. Some benefits of e-books is the amount of space it saves in a backpack and they cost less.

Many students prefer printed books to e-books

By Veronika Novoselova
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hale Library offers plenty of digital books and articles, but students still have to buy textbooks in a store or through a Web site. That could soon change, though.

CourseSmart is a new company that encourages students to buy digital textbooks. Students can choose from 2,300 of the most widely adopted electronic textbooks, and the number will increase in the future, according to the company's Web site.

CourseSmart expects to have 5,000 e-textbooks offered by many of the higher education publishers by summer 2008. With e-texts, students pay less and do not spend time in shopping lines or pay shipping fees. The company said it gives customers not only savings, but convenience. Students can use the e-text almost like a hard copy — search for a word or phrase, put in notes or highlight passages.

When students drop a class, they can return a book to the bookstore. In the same way, a client has an option of canceling a subscription to CourseSmart and getting an immediate refund within two weeks of the first subscription, provided they have read or printed less than 20 percent of the CourseSmart e-textbook, according to the company's Web site.

"Even without any promotion of our Beta site, we have thousands of student who bought e-textbooks from us this past semester," said Frank Lyman, CourseSmart representative. "Students like the instant access they can get to an e-textbook, and lots of students told us they are sick of lugging around big books. In addition, CourseSmart e-textbooks have the same page numbers as the print editions, so professors can give the same assignments with the print and digital version."

Madina Mukhanova, sophomore in economics, said she likes the idea of e-texts.

"I used to read both kind of books a lot," she said. "When I'm reading from the screen, I switch on music, drink tea and eat cookies, so time flies."

Despite some new opportunities, selling digital books is still a small part of the publishing business.

"There are five or six classes at K-State for which students have an e-book option," said Dan Walter, textbook manager at Varney's Book Store.

"For example, a general education class, Introduction to Sociology, 90 percent of students decided to read a print version of the text for the class," Walter said. "Unless there is a good universal device of reading an e-book, people will prefer paper. Today, students are used to using Internet technology and computers, but when they need to study Chapter 7 for a Friday test, most would rather read a book in a hard copy."

Some K-State students have similar opinions on the matter.

Lennart Marxen, junior in economics, said he prefers "old ways of books."

"I have to spend a lot of time in front of the screen anyway, and when it comes to reading, I would like to have a hard copy in my hands," Marxen said.

Alex Martinez, sophomore in architecture, prefers hard copies, too.

"Even though society has turned digital, I feel that it can be unreliable," Martinez said. "In the time of a power outage, digital books become useless; therefore I feel the hard copies are the most reliable source."

Law Board reviews jail expansion

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The space problem at the Riley County Jail that once existed might not be an issue for the Riley County Police Department any more.

Architect Dan Rowe and RCPD Captain Jeff Hooper gave new law board members an update on the idea of expanding the Riley County Jail yesterday afternoon.

"They originally took the proposal to the law board in 2004," Hooper said. "Due to a change of director, they put it on hold. Now half of the law board is new and they wanted to update them."

Hooper along with RCPD Director Bradley Schoen said this will have a positive effect on Riley County area.

"There were a good number of concerns and they wanted to see those addressed," Schoen said. "He mentioned that some of these concerns consisted of parking and communication within the facility."

"This will be a benefit to all of Riley County and will put the jail in better position," Schoen said. "It limits contact in respect to fights and different levels of contacts within inmates."

County Commissioner Alvin Johnson said the vote will not occur until the final drawing and architectural plans have been put together and presented. He said Tuesday was just a debriefing and the decision will be made in the future.

Hooper and Schoen from RCPD said this is the best decision for Riley County and the concerns and issues will be addressed through this plan.

Census affects national decisions on farming

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Every five years, a stack of papers is sent to houses across the country asking farmers and ranchers numerous financial and production questions.

While the paperwork can seem like a tedious job that weighs on those who receive it, the information can affect all those involved years later.

The Census of Agriculture is a count of farms and ranches and the people that operate them, according to the Department of Agriculture Web site.

The census is sent out to those that own or operate a farm or ranch, which the census defines as a place that has $1,000 or more of agricultural products produced or sold, or would have normally been sold, during the census year, according to the USDA Web site.

Eldon Thiessen, director of Kansas Agricultural Statistics, said the information gathered is the only source of comprehensive county data about agriculture.

"The important reason for responding is the benefit from having that kind of data available in an unbiased kind of data set so that everyone can use it," he said.

Thiessen said the census asks questions related to the production activity of a farm for the year, the crop production, expenses and value of the sales.

"It's really quite comprehensive," he said. "It also asks about demographics. It's amazing how many people want to know the answer to those questions."

Rick Snell, K-State county extension agent, said the census data is largely used to help organizations make decisions. He also said many legislators review the data to help make policies and analyze trends.

According to the USDA Web site, federal, state and local governments, agribusinesses and trade associations also use the census data.

The 2007 census was mailed to farm and ranch operators on Dec. 28, 2007, and operators are busy calculating their expenses and other details for the forms that are due Feb. 4.

This year the Kansas Agricultural Statistics office is aiming at a 90 percent response rate — 1 percent higher than the rate from the last census, Thiessen said.

However, getting all of the census forms mailed back isn't always easy, he said.

"Some people have to be encouraged," Thiessen said. "The important thing that we are trying to stress is the value of the census."

Snell said his job is to inform the public about the census and remind people to fill it out.

During their work, Snell and Thiessen said they encounter negativity toward the census.

"We have folks who are not particularly happy to complete the census," Thiessen said. "When they call and want to visit about it, our hope is that they'll listen to why we do this and why we believe it's an important thing to do."

"We can't do this by sitting in our office. We have got to get the input from the farmer. A good number is very important — a bad number is the worst thing that could happen."

Student, professor honored for diversity work

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two names were added to the list of trailblazers for diversity at K-State Tuesday afternoon.

The names: Farrell Webb, associate professor in family studies and human services and Clemente Jaquez-Herrera, graduate student in architecture.

Webb and Herrera were honored at the Commerce Bank Presidential Awards for Distinguished Services to Multicultural Students reception at the K-State Alumni Center.

The award is one of the most, if not the most significant award a student or faculty member at K-State can receive for their efforts to further diversity at K-State, said Dr. Myra Gordon, associate provost for diversity and dual career and development.

"Dr. Webb is one of the most quiet powerful forces behind the scenes," Gordon said. "He is working in the trenches making sure our graduate students leave our programs with excellent skills in every area — he is an unsung hero."

Several of Webb's present and former students were in attendance, singing his praises of how he mentored them and led them down a path of success.

"What sets Dr. Webb apart is all his work with undergraduates and graduate students," said Anita Cortez, director of the developing scholars program. "After students graduate, he continues to work with them in their graduate programs and tries to see them all the way through."

Webb is the instructor of the Developing Scholars seminar, a program designed to give opportunities to underrepresented students to participate in campus research.

Farrell Webb, associate professor of family studies and human services, receives a hug from Wendy Ornelas, associate dean of the College of Architecture, Planning and Design, after Webb was recognized as the winner of the Commerce Bank Presidential Faculty/Staff Award for Distinguished Services to Historically Underrepresented Students Tuesday afternoon at the K-State Alumni Center.

"He sets very high expectations for undergraduates — when students are working with him, they find out very quickly that they are working at a much higher level than their peers," Cortez said.

Vera White, recent graduate student of Webb's, said Webb is willing to assist students with any issue.

"He has an overwhelming desire to make sure all students are successful," White said. "He does everything in his power to equip them with the tools for success academically and post-academic."

Webb noted during his humble acceptance speech that he is just doing his job. He encouraged faculty to spend more time with students.

"I teach students it is not ok to not do your best," he said. "That is just unacceptable."

Tom Giller, president of Commerce Bank, said this year marks 13 years of collaboration with K-State and the bank to give the award.

Giller said it is an honor to be able to present the award during K-State's Martin Luther King Jr. Observance Week.

Herrera, the student recipient was noted for being a path maker for minority students at K-State.

"He tirelessly forges the path for those that follow after him," Cortez said.

This year, Herrera gained attention for being a national finalist for the Rhodes Scholarship, one of the most prestigious scholarships in the U.S.

He is also a member of the Developing Scholars Program and was one of Webb's students.

"DSP helped me realize that I could achieve all my goals," Herrera said.

Herrera has his plate full being involved in the National Organization of Minority Architects (NOMAS), Latino fraternity Sigma Lambda Beta and serving on various diversity councils on campus.

"Clemente is an outstanding student, a true role model for all of us and a quintessential university citizen."

David Griffin Sr., associate professor and assistant dean for diversity secondary education, said the committee had to make a difficult decision, but they used four main traits to select their winner: dignity, compassion, leadership and strength.

"This committee is one of the most important, yet challenging selection committee on campus," Griffin said.

International students adapt to change of scenery in Manhattan

By Holly Campbell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A few weeks ago, Yelica Lopez, graduate student in anatomy and physiology, had never seen real snow. In her hometown, Lopez was used to average temperatures in the 70s.

Lopez recently traveled from Barquisimeto, Venezuela, to attend K-State. She chose K-State on the recommendation of colleagues and professors from her home university, who told her K-State was a good, affordable school, she said.

Stacey Bailey, a foreign student adviser at the International Student Center, said about 100 new international students arrived in Manhattan this month to attend K-State for the spring semester.

To ease their transition to K-State, new international students were given a special orientation before classes started, Bailey said.

Guests from the Registrar's Office, Lafene Health Center, the English Language Program, the International Coordinating Council and Union Program Council spoke to the students. A second day of orientation included information on banking, health insurance and other important topics for new students, Bailey said.

Lopez attended the orientation session and said it was helpful. However, Lopez said she and other international students still face some challenges living in Manhattan.

"The problem here is you can't live without a car," she said. "So it's difficult for a person like me."

To get her shopping done, Lopez said she bundled up against the cold and lined up with about two dozen other students at Jardine Apartment Complex Saturday morning before 9 a.m. waiting for a shuttle.

The shuttle had to make multiple trips to deliver all of the waiting students to Wal-Mart and Manhattan International Foods.

It also picks up students at the K-State Student Union and Moore Hall later in the morning, according to the shuttle schedule.

All K-State students are allowed to use the shuttle service. However, non-student spouses and children cannot ride.

The shuttle service is good, Lopez said, but the time period available – the first students are picked up from Wal-Mart at 10:15 a.m. – is short.

"You spend a lot of time waiting for the shuttle, and time is very important," she added.

By contrast, the price of gas in Venezuela is low, and public transportation is so plentiful, drivers will even fight over who can pick up patrons, Lopez said.

Virendra Landge, graduate student in food science, has been attending K-State for a year since moving from India.

Landge said his adjustment to K-State was not very difficult. He said he does not have a car, but has managed to shop and see Manhattan sights, like Aggieville, by riding with friends.

Finding the comforts of home has been a challenge, Lopez said.

She said she has seen many Mexican, Asian and Indian foods in Manhattan, but not many Latin products. Landge said over the last year, he has been having a harder time finding Indian foods in Manhattan stores as well.

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Nasim Rahmani, graduate student in mechanical engineering, is checked out by Analiza Heaton, owner of the Manhattan International Foods on Tuttle Creek Blvd, on Saturday morning. Rahmani, an Iranian student, ran errands on the shuttle, which is a service provided to international students.

In her home country, Lopez said there are some large stores like Wal-Mart, but generally there are more places to shop.

Late in the morning, the shuttle, packed full with students and their shopping bags, dropped Lopez and the other riders back at their apartments.

Despite the cold, Lopez said she does enjoy the Kansas snow. "It's beautiful," she said.

City Commission approves debt, development resolutions 5-0

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan City Commission discussed city debt, an intersection project and support of an affordable housing project last night at City Hall.

Commissioners first addressed Manhattan's overall budget.

City financial director, Bernie Hayen alleviated the commission's concern when he said Manhattan is $80 million below the debt ceiling.

Commissioner Bruce Snead said several citizens have complained about the special assessments added to their taxes when purchasing new houses.

Hayen said he thought the assessments are the best option for the city and its homeowners.

"I have long said the greatest benefit to the city is housing divisions," Hayen said. "It is like putting in a small shopping mall."

Hayen also said the special assessments helped the home buyer by saving them $300-$400 with lower percentage rates offered by the city.

The city charges 2 percent on the special assessments over a 20-year period versus a standard mortgage rate of 18 percent over a 30-year period.

All items on the consent agenda passed 5-0.

Commissioners also listened to the update from Rob Ott, city engineer on the U.S. Highway 24, Marlatt Avenue intersection project.

Ott identified four problems with the current intersection: it has increased traffic volumes, increased crash rates, no pedestrian access across Highway 24 and drainage problems.

Ott discussed five solutions which will improve the intersection.

These include turning lanes, traffic signals, street lights, a pedestrian/drainage cell and removing the guardrail.

The Highway 24, Marlatt Avenue project passed 5-0.

For the land owners losing property due to expanding the intersection, Public Works Director Dale Houdeshell gave the commissioners a few options.

"[The city] might be able to give in kind compensation as opposed to cash," Houdeshell said.

The motion passed 5-0 for providing just compensation to the land owners.

The last item on the agenda addressed the support of the Manhattan Area Housing Partnership.

"We are Manhattan's low-income housing developer," said Chris Bailey, President of MAHP.

Bailey said MAHP hoped to begin the new housing project in August 2008 and have it completed by March 2009.

"Housing in Manhattan is very expensive," said Commissioner Bruce Snead. "Land is hard to come by."

Snead said he supported the efforts of MAHP. The commission voted 5-0 in favor of supporting MAHP's request for funding from the state.

Alpha Xi Delta would like to congratulate our new Executive Officers.

Lack of achievement

Gov. Sebelius to give Democratic Party response to State of Union Address at the end of the month

In front of the whole nation, or at least those who care, Kansas Gov. Kathleen Sebelius is delivering the Democratic Party response to President Bush's final State of the Union Address on Jan. 28.

Described as an up-and-coming star of the Democratic Party, Sebelius has received many compliments from her Democratic Party colleagues.

From their Washington offices, Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., and Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., said in a joint statement, "[Sebelius'] record of accomplishment in Kansas is evidence of what can be achieved when leaders reach across the aisle on behalf of all Americans."

In the mind of a Democrat, Gov. Sebelius has done a lot to further the party agenda during her two consecutive terms, but "reaching across the aisle" is not difficult when many of the Republicans in the state government are rolling over and dying.

The Republican Party in the state of Kansas should be embarrassed for allowing her to get away with all the problems she has caused.

Contrary to the belief of many Republicans, including the President of the United States, small government has been a principle at the pinnacle of conservatism. Our state government is growing by leaps and bounds; according to the group Americans for Prosperity, "Since March 2001, Kansas has lost 26,100 private sector jobs and has added 15,700 government jobs."

According to the Kansas City Star on Jan. 15, Kansas GOP Chairman Kris Kobach pointed out that in western Kansas, where private sector jobs are scarce,

Gov. Sebelius' administration rejected the expansion of a coal fire power plant that would have created 2,400 more jobs in the region.

With these numbers and examples, the Bureau of Labor and Statistics ranks Kansas near the bottom of the United States in the creation of private sector jobs, but No. 1 in creating government jobs. Each of these government jobs compounds the bureaucracy in this state.

After rapidly expanding the size of government in Kansas, Sebelius has done her best to increase the tax burden on all Kansas citizens. According to the Tax Foundation, income taxes in the state of Kansas are at an all-time high.

Barry W. Poulson, distinguished scholar for Americans for Prosperity, wrote in his analysis of Kansas tax policy that "from 2000 to 2004, Kansas' ranking in relative tax burdens increased from 22nd to 10th. There is no other state in the nation in which the tax burden increased as rapidly as Kansas' over this period."

Sebelius' name has been popping up over the past few years as a potential cabinet member or even vice-presidential candidate in the upcoming election; however, her name has moved up because of her financial backing by many political action committees. These donors have made her ask "How high?" when many of these PACs say "Jump," but the Democratic Party knows she can bring in money.

Achievement means results, but in the minds of Sebelius and members of the Democratic Party, leadership and achievement must be a regression to drive this state into the ground.

Sebelius will be representing our state on a national stage, but hopefully in the days following, the trouble this state is in will be exposed and true solutions to fix Kansas will be revealed.

Voting machines interfere with voting, should be replaced

It is 2008 and already we, the American people, are getting ready for a new chapter in the United States' presidential history. For the first time since 2000, U.S. voters have fresh opportunities in both wings for warming the chair in the White House. However, since the turn of the millennium, it has become apparent to many people that voting is not the way it used to be.

In recent years, with technological advances, it has become standard to use new voting methods, namely electronic voting machines. In New Hampshire at the beginning of January, Democratic candidate Rep. Dennis Kucinich, D-Ohio, paid a $2,000 fee for a 'recount' in the number of votes he received. The reason: Kucinich was concerned about online reports alleging discrepancies between hand-counted ballots, which favored Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., and machine-counted ballots, which favored Sen. Hillary Clinton, D-N.Y.

If this was not such a complex subject,

GRADY BOLDING

I would probably explain it a lot better. But I'll try either way.

Clinton's success in New Hampshire could be attributed not only to her tearful performance, but the Diebold voting machine, which credited her with more votes. In September 2006, computer scientists at Princeton University published a study that examined the vulnerabilities of the Diebold's AccuVote-TS machine. On its Web site, Princeton's Center for Information Technology produced a demonstration video of how the machine could steal votes using malicious software or even a virus — one could easily break into the system, install a malicious memory card, and piece the device back together in less than a minute.

Eerie, huh? Just look at the fallout.

On Nov. 30, 2007, the Houston Chronicle reported how the Republican leadership in Wharton County, Texas, decided to return to paper ballots for the upcoming primary in March. The reason: a local businessman stated some state constitutional amendments he voted for "changed before his eyes" on the screen of a computerized voting machine he was using in Boling, Texas.

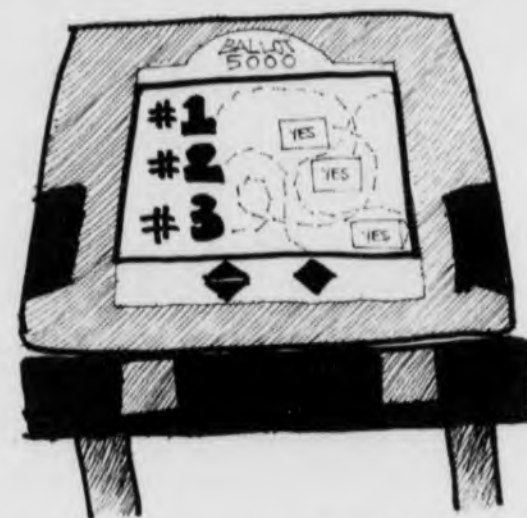

On Dec. 18, 2007, the Rocky Mountain

News reported Colorado Secretary of State Mike Coffman announced the decertification of thousands of these machines in 53 counties.

Then, on Dec. 31, 2007, the Associated Press reported officials were sent scrambling from California to Florida for paper ballots after discovering "critical flaws in the accuracy and security" of their own Diebold machines.

If anything, it seems the United States needs to wake up and go back to the Stone Age when it comes to voting — marking an "X" next to the candidate's name and calling it good. Since 2000, it has been one problem after another with voting — believe me, having lived in West Palm Beach, Fla., during the 2000 election, I can tell you I am fed up with hearing the same story for every election.

So unless election officials throughout the country can find a way to replace these faulty machines, I'm staying home on Election Day and watching "South Park."

TO THE POINT

Students deserve choice between online, physical textbooks

The days of students carrying stacks of books and notebooks to class and swimming in a sea of loose paper are coming to an end. The days of teachers writing an entire lecture on a blackboard seem to have already done so. The time of the textbook might be the next aspect of school to turn into a distant memory.

Many students bring a laptop computer to class with them so they can follow an instructor's PowerPoint slide show lecture. If the instructor doesn't use a slide show, some students still prefer to type their notes on a computer rather than using paper and writing them by hand. Students now can use their laptops not only as an all-in-one notebook, but as an all-in-one textbook as well.

Some students cannot afford to spend hundreds of dollars on textbooks every semester, and for those who can, having to shop online and in a bookstore takes time, especially if the bookstore is crowded. The prospect of e-textbooks is good news for students who would prefer to take a laptop to class instead of a backpack, a textbook, a notebook and a pencil or pen.

Students should have a choice in how to buy a textbook, whether electronic or paper. Some students still prefer to hold a book in their hands and turn a page, rather than looking at a screen and clicking the "next" key.

The best of both worlds can co-exist, and they should continue to do so.

Students should not be required to use only one form of a textbook. If a student's budget is tight, e-textbooks offer some relief, and if the student chooses to buy traditional books, they have that right, too.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

A bite for the road

Campus nutrition educators offer simple, healthy snacks for students to eat between meals on campus

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Snacks can be delicious, but eating between meals is also a healthy part of everyday life, said a K-State nutrition specialist.

Sandy Procter, Expanded Food and Nutrition Education Program coordinator and assistant professor of human nutrition, said college students should plan ahead and keep a proactive attitude about snacks.

Whole-grain foods like tortillas, popcorn and bread make easy snacks, Procter said. Small vegetable trays also can make several days of grab-and-go snacks, she said.

"The more basic foods are going to give you flexibility," Procter said. "They can help you meet hunger pangs for foods that are salty."

Because college students often lead busy lifestyles, Procter said students should prepare snacks the night before they plan to eat them. Simple foods like whole-grain cereal and skim milk make ideal snacks for those on the go, she said.

"Snacks aren't a bad thing," Procter said. "Portion control is important, but [snacks] aren't bad. Snacks help us get to that next meal without overeating at that next meal."

Snacks should come from the first three sections of MyPyramid — grains, vegetables and fruits, said Kathy Walsten, nutrition educator with K-State Research and Extension's Family Nutrition Program.

She also said snacks should incorporate at least two different pyramid sections.

"Snacking really should be part of what you eat all day long," Walsten said. "They can take the edge off hunger."

College students often need energy from snacks like protein bars during the day between classes, said Stephanie Davis, Sensible Nutrition and Body Image Choices (SNAC) member.

"My theory is eat when you are hungry and stop when you are full," Davis, senior in family studies and human services and Spanish said. "I think the key is eat in moderation and snack in moderation. If you snack throughout the day, I think it helps you know your body better. You don't gorge during dinner, but you aren't empty either."

K-State Research and Extension's Family Nutrition Program and Kids a Cookin' offer recipes designed for 9- to 11-year-olds that college students also can make on the go, Walsten said.

For more information on the following recipes, complete nutritional information and additional recipes, visit www.kidsacookin.ksu.edu. Food safety is important during food preparation and consumption, Walsten said.

She said students should always wash their hands before preparing and eating their snacks.

ENTERTAINMENT BRIEFS

LEDGER FOUND DEAD

NEW YORK (CNN) — Actor Heath Ledger was found dead Tuesday of a possible drug overdose in a Lower Manhattan apartment, the New York Police Department said.

The Academy Award-nominated actor was 28.

"Pills were found in the vicinity of the bed," police spokesman Paul Browne told CNN.

"This is being looked at as a possible overdose, but that is not confirmed yet."

Ledger was unresponsive when he was found by a housekeeper who had gone to wake him for an appointment with a masseuse in the Soho apartment, Browne said.

He was declared dead at about 3:30 p.m., Browne said.

In 2005, the actor played Ennis Del Mar in "Brokeback Mountain," about two cowboys who had a secret relationship.

The role earned him the Oscar nomination.

KING'S KITCHEN

Chili recipe provides warm alternative during cold winter months

Here at the Collegian, I have been pegged as only an opinion writer over the past few years. Many readers have failed to see me as anything other than "that opinionated guy," but few know I spend a lot of my free time developing recipes and cooking.

BRETT KING

After a year of petitioning,

I am happy to announce this is the first installment of "King's Kitchen," which will be a weekly series of columns on The Edge page.

Every Wednesday, my hands will leave the keyboard behind, fire up my stove, pick up my Wusthof and Sabatier Au Carbone knives and present some of my classic recipes. They will range in complexity, but I try to keep cooking simple and enjoyable.

With global warming not doing its part, we are stuck freezing at the end of January. After a long day of attending classes and walking in and out of the cold, students should enjoy a hearty, warm meal to take the chill out of their bones. A warm bowl of chili can keep a person feeling good and keep the sheets warm all night.

A basic essential that every college student needs is a slow-cooker or Crock-Pot. Using one can help students follow the No. 1 rule in cooking chili — slow, low and steady.

HEARTY CHILI

—2 pounds ground venison or hamburger
—1 package of Williams Chili Seasoning

—2 cans red beans, drained
—2 cans kidney beans, drained
—1 white onion, diced thinly
—1/4 cup ketchup
—2 cans diced tomatoes
—1/4 teaspoon cinnamon
—1/2 teaspoon sugar
—1/2 teaspoon salt
—1/2 teaspoon pepper
—Tabasco® (optional)
—mild cheddar (optional)
—soda crackers (optional)

When it comes to the meat, I prefer to use venison because it gives a rich flavor, but basic ground hamburger is a fine substitute.

To begin, brown the meat over medium-high heat in a large skillet; once meat is cooked, drain out grease and place in slow-cooker. Add package of chili seasoning, red beans, kidney beans, onion, ketchup and diced tomatoes.

Remember not to drain the juice from the cans of tomatoes because the juice provides the necessary liquid without losing the flavor. Add in salt and pepper and stir ingredients together in slow-cooker.

Leave chili to cook in slow-cooker on the low setting for seven hours. If timing is right, the meal can be ready when you come home at night from school or work.

Salt, pepper and Tabasco® are nothing more than flavor enhancers driven by personal taste. Don't be afraid to take a spoon and try a little bit while the chili is simmering and add a little of each to fit personal preference.

When serving, top with cheese and add a side of crackers, if desired. Keep leftovers for up to one week and use to make chili dogs, chili cheese fries or even chili burgers.

K-State looks to stay undefeated in conference play

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A team looking to battle back from a 1-2 conference record will play host to K-State at the Coors Events Center in Boulder, Colo., tonight.

Colorado (9-8, 1-2 Big 12 Conference) has had a rough beginning in the conference, dropping a game to Texas A&M, then falling by two to the University of Texas, both on the road. The team's lone win has been against Nebraska in Boulder, when the Buffaloes edged the Cornhuskers 55-51. Tip-off for tonight's game will be at 8 p.m. on ESPN.

"What opens my eyes is when I see them playing with the amount of purpose they are playing with," said coach Frank Martin. "I see the incredible amount of growth that they have done as a basketball team. They're resilient and they're doing what they're told to do, and they're playing with tremendous passion and togetherness. They're a completely different team than they were in November."

Colorado is led in scoring by senior guard Richard Roby, who is averaging 16 points per contest and six rebounds. The Buffaloes' assists leader is senior guard Marcus Hall, who is dishing almost four assists to his teammates per game.

K-State (12-4, 2-0 Big 12) is looking to preserve its perfect conference record. Only two other teams (Kansas and Baylor) are also perfect through three conference games.

The Wildcats' leading scorer, Michael Beasley, is also leading the Big 12 in scoring. Beasley, a freshman forward, is averaging 24 points per game, as well as a conference-high 12 rebounds per game. Freshman forward Bill Walker is also providing strong contributions for K-State, averaging 16 points and six rebounds per game. The one-two punch of Beasley and Walker is one aspect Colorado coach Jeff Bzdelik is worried about.

"Obviously, they're a handful, and they've proven that nationwide," Bzdelik said. "We're going to have to be at our very best just to have a chance to be competitive against those two great talents."

K-State already has proven it can win on the road. The Wildcats went to Norman, Okla., Jan. 12 and shocked Oklahoma, 84-82. With the home teams prevailing often this season, the rare road win that K-State has is extremely valuable, Martin said.

"It's nearly impossible to win on the road in this league because of the kind of teams, the kind of coaching and the kind of preparation the teams have and the venues that you play in," he said. "When you figure out a way to score one more point than the other team on the road, you get on the bus and you get out of town."

Senior guard Blake Young, who was the leading

No. 22 Wildcats to face Iowa State

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fresh off the defeat of another top 25-ranked team, the K-State women will finish a three-game homestand tonight when the Wildcats play Iowa State.

This time it will be the newly-ranked No. 22 Wildcats who will have a target on their backs. The Wildcats moved into the AP Top 25 after beating three ranked opponents in their last four games.

K-State (12-5, 4-0 Big 12 Conference) reached its best conference start since the 2003-04 season Saturday night when they topped then-No. 25 Colorado.

K-State coach Deb Patterson said the Cyclones present a different challenge for the Wildcats because they run a system which relies heavily on the three-pointer, and they possess the ability to hit those shots from anywhere.

"In the country, there is no team like them," she said. "They really have a very distinct style, and when you are shooting 20 to 26 threes a game and that's your priority, it's a system."

K-State also has been shooting the three-pointers well lately.

In conference play, the Wildcats are 27-of-72 from three-point range. It's an improvement from last season that Patterson attributes to better rhythm.

"A year ago we had a bazillion wide-open three looks that we missed, but I'm not sure that we had necessarily established quality rhythm with five players on the floor," she said. "I think this year we have better tempo and rhythm."

The improved rhythm could be attributed to the returning experience of the Wildcats and the way they have been playing as a unit on the floor. Four starters are averaging 35-39 minutes per game in conference play.

"We don't have one player that we turn to this year; we have all five of us that can do the job," said junior guard Shalee Lehning. "This year our team has a burning desire inside of us that we haven't had in the past few years; we never give up."

Lehning said the Cyclones are a different team in comparison to the other teams K-State has played this season and said they have to be respected on the court.

"They are a very talented team," she said. "Just a hard-working, blue-collar team that is coming in with the ability to knock down threes at every position."

Iowa State (12-5, 1-3 Big 12) received one vote this week in the AP poll and is coming off an 82-72 loss to Nebraska Saturday.

The last time the Wildcats faced the Cyclones was in the 2007 Big 12 Tournament when they came out on the losing end of a 57-45 game.

K-State is led in scoring in conference play by senior guard Kimberly Dietz, who is scoring 17.5 points per game, and Ashley Sweat, who averages 15.8 per game.

Tip-off for the game is 7 p.m. today in Bramlage Coliseum.

Less-ambitious New Year's resolutions can still be started

Though January is quickly coming to an end, for some, the year is really just beginning. If your New Year's resolution sounded something like, "I'm going to lose 150 pounds this year," now is not too late to start.

If you haven't even entertained a thought like that since the power went out and you flunked your last final, now would be the time. To start, consider your class schedule and pencil in a time that you are going to make it to the gym. Just like you wouldn't skip your human body lecture, you need to train yourself not to skip the gym.

If exercise is something you have only heard about in movies, then trying to force yourself to do cardio for three hours every day is unrealistic. Start with going to Peters Recreation Complex three days a week. When a healthy thought runs through your head, tell your roommate, your significant other or your dog. Just saying it out loud and telling someone else will make you more likely to stick to it. You might even inspire someone else to make healthy choices, too.

Which brings me to another piece of advice: drag some poor soul with you when you work out.

A sure-fire way to make sure you fail to meet your fitness goals this semester is to do something that you don't know how to do, aren't good at or can't stand. If you have no idea how to work Cybex machines, then get a personal trainer or attend a group fitness class. If the thought of running on a treadmill for an hour absolutely bores you to tears, then switch machines every ten minutes or go for a run outside. You can do other activities – but if your boyfriend loves to play racquetball, but resembles Ben Stiller's character from "Along Came Polly," then maybe the rowing machine looks a little friendlier.

Group fitness classes are also an excellent way to introduce yourself to exercise, especially now, at the beginning of the semester when everyone in class is in the same boat as you: they have absolutely no idea what they are doing.

To help students find an idea, the rec is offering a new Friday class: tai chi. And if BOSU (a workout which involves ball exercises to increase balance) or indoor cycling sound like something you want to try, then keep looking for free classes.

There is also the possibility that your New Year's resolution had nothing to do with fitness at all, but instead you want to try to eat better. The rec offers a nutritional analysis for $15 for K-State students and $20 for everyone else with a membership. You can have your diet evaluated, set goals and make plans to change your diet.

One last little tidbit of advice: if you are going some place warm for spring break, I might suggest that you get your butt to the rec now, instead of waiting until March 9 to lose those 25 extra pounds? I realize you might not want to hear it, and I might be "sucking the fun out of your February," but you'll thank me when you look sexy on the beach.

Two K-State track & field athletes were honored by the Big 12 for their performances at the Wildcat Invitational last weekend.

Junior Loren Groves was also recognized. She received the Big 12 women's indoor track athlete of the week. Groves set a career-best in the women's weight throw with a mark of 69-11.50, which also broke the university record by nine inches.

Groves ranks second on the NCAA performance list and automatically qualified for the NCAA championships. To qualify for the NCAA in the women's weight throw, competitors must throw at least 68.9 feet.

Junior Scott Sellers received the Big 12 men's indoor track athlete of the week award. Sellers finished second in the high jump with a height of 7-04.50. He only trailed 2007 USA runner-up Jesse Williams from the University of Southern California.

Williams was recognized as the top collegiate high jumper in the country. Sellers currently ranks first in the nation in the high jump event on the NCAA performance list. Sellers cleared the qualifying height of 7-03.5 inches during the Carol Robinson Winter Pentathlon Dec. 7.

PAKISTANI PRESIDENT PROMISES ELECTIONS, ASKS WEST FOR PATIENCE

BRUSSELS, Belgium — President Pervez Musharraf promised Monday that Pakistan will hold fair elections next month and urged the West to be more patient with his nation's efforts to achieve higher standards of human rights.

He also sought to ease worries about Pakistan's nuclear arsenal as Islamic extremists step up their fight with his government, insisting that tight security would prevent the weapons from falling into the hands of terrorists.

"We have a multi-layer custodial and command system," Musharraf told the European Parliament as he began an eight-day European trip by meeting with senior EU and NATO officials.

Musharraf said Pakistan is a largely tribal society struggling to be a democracy and taking on the role of a front-line player in the global fight against terrorism.

CHINESE OFFICIAL CALLS FOR EFFORTS TO STOP WORKPLACE ACCIDENTS

BEIJING — China's senior safety inspector urged the public and the media Tuesday to expose workplace accidents in a bid to end corruption and official misdeeds that are aggravating the country's high rate of work deaths.

Li Yizhong, head of the State Administration of Work Safety, said public whistleblowing provides crucial clues for investigators often hobbled by cover-ups by local officials, especially on coal mine accidents.

"We welcome the public's supervision. We welcome the reports made by people to expose corruption," Li said at a news conference in which he appealed for help five times. "According to some tips, for example, we have found government officials who made unlawful investments in coal mines."

Appeals for public and media intervention are an increasingly common tactic for the usually closed, authoritarian communist government as it tries to rein in local officials eager to protect industries and businesses flourishing under capitalist reforms.

NEW IRAN RESOLUTION EXPECTED TO PASS SECURITY COUNCIL THOUGH DIFFERENCES EXIST

PARIS — The U.N. Security Council's five permanent members and Germany are expected to agree Tuesday on a new resolution to pressure Iran on its nuclear program, a French diplomat said. But a U.S. official said differences over the issue remain.

The senior French diplomat, who briefed reporters Monday on condition that he not be identified by name, said an agreement was very close and should be finalized by the six nations' foreign ministers at a meeting in Berlin, Germany.

However, others were more cautious about what the talks could produce. Momentum for a third resolution has slowed since a U.S. intelligence assessment last month indicated Tehran had stopped active work on a nuclear weapons program in 2003.

A senior U.S. official said Monday that the six nations had made some progress in negotiating a new resolution in a flurry of weekend conference calls, but "substantial" differences still existed.

FORGERY INVESTIGATION UNDERWAY FOR PUTIN CRITIC, RUSSIAN PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE

MOSCOW — Prosecutors announced a forgery investigation Tuesday into the campaign of the only liberal Kremlin critic still in Russia's presidential race, a contest already expected to be won easily by Vladimir Putin's hand-picked candidate to succeed him.

Liberal opposition groups are small and weak, and former prime minister Mikhail Kasyanov has been given no chance in the election, even if the probe doesn't push him out of the race.

A spokeswoman for the prosecutor-general's office, Tatiana Chernyshova, said on state television that the investigation involved possible forged signatures on nominating petitions for Kasyanov.

Chernyshova said suspected false signatures were found in the Yaroslavl and Mari-El regions. The head of Kasyanov's campaign in Mari-El, Rustam Abdullin, was detained earlier this month.

NEW AGREEMENT COULD SEND ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS HOME TO VIETNAM

HANOI, Vietnam — Thousands of Vietnamese living illegally in the United States now face deportation after the two countries completed an agreement Tuesday, a move that sparked worry among immigrant communities.

Vietnamese who entered the U.S. illegally after the former foes normalized relations in 1995 could now be forced to return to their birth country, said Julie Myers, director of U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement.

The deal has been under negotiation for 10 years. Vietnam had previously been reluctant to accept citizens back, and community leaders in the U.S. said many immigrants have been living with deportation orders for years, even decades.

"Some Vietnamese have been here a very long time," said Carolyn Tran, an organizer with VietUnity, an Oakland-based Vietnamese community organization. "They don't have a connection there any more."

TO THE EDITOR

City offers several giving opportunities

Editor,

Friday's editorial on giving was a sigh of relief. Whatever your political affiliation, religion or ethnicity, finding contentment is one of the most valuable quests you'll embark on. And once you do, it will be a challenge to re-orient yourself to stay on the journey. I hope Mark's thoughts on giving did not fall on deaf ears.

But because we all need reminders, I wanted to repeat the call to engage in the community around us and around this globe. These organizations are looking for students right here in Manhattan. # Macintosh unveils thinnest laptop yet to be produced

By Brandon McAtee
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Macintosh unveiled its latest laptop this month, which proved to be the thinnest laptop available: the Macintosh Air.

The MacBook Air is 0.16 to 0.76 inches thin and weighs about three pounds, with a 1280 x 800 resolution, 13.3-inch LED screen. The laptop also features a full-size, back-lit keyboard that adjusts to lighting for the area the user is in.

"It's definitely the thinnest, but it is not the lightest," said Drew Claassen, Union Computer Store associate and senior in marketing. "Apple made it with the full keyboard and also made it not to sacrifice any battery life."

The battery is thinner than the usual laptop battery but will still last up to five hours, according to www.apple.com.

The Web site also claims the Air includes two gigabytes of RAM and 80 gigabytes of hard drive space. It will include the option of having a 64 gigabyte solid-state drive, which will have no moving parts for durability.

Claassen said the Air is between the MacBook and the MacBook Pro in terms of what it has to offer.

"It is kind of designed as your second computer, but it could be used as your first," he said.

Inputs included on the Air include a

COURTESY ART

USB 2.0 port, a headphone jack and a micro DVI port, according to Apple's Web site.

The Air does not have a CD drive, but one can be purchased externally. Without one, a user can transfer files with other computers without wires. There also will be a built-in camera on the monitor. A feature not seen before is the trackpad, which is comparable to a touch screen. With the trackpad, users can pinch, swipe or rotate to zoom in on text, or they can advance through photos and adjust an image, all from simple movements of their fingers over the pad.

"I am sure the trackpad is changing computers and [it] is the way it will be in the future," Claassen said.

Though there are only about six pre-orders from the Union Computer Store, Claassen said he believes it is something that most people actually want to see.

He said the thinness of the Air is difficult to describe accurately.

"I don't think it is something you can even fathom until it is actually seen," Claassen said.

2nd-grader donates art-show proceeds to devastated school

GREENSBURG, Kan. — Elementary school students here have finally gotten a chance to meet the McPherson, Kan., girl who raised $4,000 to help rebuild their school.

During a school assembly Monday, Emma Marten, 7, and her family handed over the proceeds of a September auction of her artwork.

"For a second-grader to undertake what she did—the compassion—it was inspiring," said Staci Derstein, principal of Greensburg Grade School, which was destroyed along with most of the town by a tornado in May.

School officials said they plan to use the money any way they can but will focus first on the school's art program and Emma's grade level. They said they typically target donations on contributors' areas of interest.

Marten said she got the idea in May when she saw a Kansas City-based artist's benefit art show for Greensburg in Hutchinson. Her parents told her they would help her do a benefit show of her own if she created 25 art pieces, which she did mostly out of crayon, marker and paint.

"When she did the pieces, we kind of realized it's our turn to do our part," said Amy Marten, Emma's mother, "and we put the prayers out there, we put the word out, and people literally started coming to us and saying, 'This is the person you need to talk to,' or 'We've already taken care of the auctioneer.' The pieces really fell into place. It was very evident that God was involved in it from the beginning."

A new school won't be completed for more than a year, but the school is making do with temporary facilities.

A new gym and cafeteria already have been built and served as a backdrop for Monday's ceremony.

Students at the school sent Emma Marten thank-you notes and cards after hearing about her auction.

"We've had lots of people around the state doing various things," said Darin Headrick, Greensburg superintendent of schools. "It's really touching and it's really special when the kids do stuff."

Emma Marten's schoolmates and members of her church in McPherson also wrote cards to Greensburg's kindergarten through third-grade students, which were handed out before Monday's event.

"It's an honor for us that Emma gets to be the face of this, but it really was a community effort," Amy Marten said.

Embattled KC parks board member resigns; said she felt betrayed by mayor, needed to express ideas on immigration

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Frances Semler, who was the focus of months of controversy because of her affiliation with an anti-illegal immigration organization, has resigned from the city parks board.

Semler, 74, said Tuesday she resigned because her involvement with the Kansas City Parks and Recreation Board had become too contentious and she did not feel Mayor Mark Funkhouser supported her.

"I feel betrayed," she said. "From time to time they would say good things, but from time to time there would be something hurtful. ... But it all piles up."

Semler, a member of the Arizona-based Minuteman Civil Defense Corps since December 2006, said she spoke with Funkhouser on Tuesday after he received her resignation letter, which she faxed to his office late Monday night. Funkhouser did not know Semler planned to resign, said his spokesman, Kendrick Blackwood.

Funkhouser said he was disappointed with Semler's resignation.

"She says she didn't feel supported," Funkhouser said. "I think the record shows differently."

Funkhouser named Semler to the five-member park board last summer. Her appointment triggered protests from minority groups, including the National Council of La Raza, which voted in October to cancel plans to hold its national convention in Kansas City because of Semler's Minuteman membership.

Last week the Southern Christian Leadership Conference said it also decided to move its convention from Kansas City to New Orleans.

Charles Steele Jr., president and chief executive officer of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, advised other civil rights organizations to boycott the city because of Semler.

Janet Murguia, president of La Raza, said Tuesday it was "regrettable that the mayor did not act sooner."

"I place responsibility for this whole mess straight at the feet of the mayor," Murguia said. "He has to be accountable for this, and he should move forward hopefully having learned from the experience and becoming more sensitive to the interests of the Hispanic community and to the broader economic interests of the city."

Chris Simcox, president of the Minuteman Civil Defense Corps, said Funkhouser "has chosen to play racial politics and cater to the bigotry of the open borders lobby, rather than support his own appointee Frances Semler."

In a telephone interview Tuesday, Semler defended her involvement in the anti-illegal immigration group, which advocates patrolling the Mexican border and reports illegal immigrants to authorities.

"I'm a decent, nice person that happens to belong to the Minuteman and thinks our borders should be protected and our laws upheld," Semler said.

Semler said her resignation was not prompted by any one incident, but that she grew tired of being called a racist and of the "unjust" accusations against the Minutemen.

"Several times I was accused of being racist, and I've never been racist," she said. "When you see horrible names that people call you, it takes you aback."

She said an option she was given by the city was to renounce the Minutemen while continuing her participation, which did not sit well with her.

"It just seemed dishonest," she said. "It was just being false. Then it's just gone on. Little things here or there, he [Funkhouser] stated that he doesn't care for the Minutemen. That's his privilege."

However, she said, she should be able to express her ideas about illegal immigration and serve on the park board.

"Many citizens are reluctant to do so for fear of being subjected to the destruction of their character as I have been," her resignation letter said. She said she will continue her involvement with the Minuteman Civil Defense Corps but would not become involved again in city politics.

"It really saddens me," Semler said. "I wish them well. I really do, for the city's sake, too."

CENSUS | Ag report can be tedious, but affects nearly every farmer

If people are making decisions on bad data, then that could do no good."

Elaine Heller, technology support consultant for the Office of the Registrar, said she and her husband received the 2007 census. She said her husband is the one who fills out the paperwork, which can be time-consuming because it requires comprehensive information that the couple wants to make sure is accurate.

"It is something that my husband feels obligated to do," she said.

She said they have been involved with different agricultural organizations, including Farm Bureau, and know the importance of the data.

Snell said there are two reasons why people have negative thoughts about the census: those that receive it see the length of the survey and realize the amount of information they will be releasing.

"Nobody likes paperwork — it's fairly lengthy," Snell said. "It takes some time. The other thing is I think a lot of them feel like it's nobody's business. They feel like they're divulging information they would like to keep private."

However, Snell said the data gathered does not reveal any information about individual farmers. All of the information from the census is kept confidential.

U.S. Code states that those who receive a form must complete it, even if they did not operate a farm or ranch in 2007, according to U.S. Code Title 7.

Thiessen said some people might receive the census even if they did not operate a farm in 2007 because their name was on a list included with other producers. Some people might have sold their farming operation between the last census in 2002 and the most recent census. However, they still need to return the paperwork. Little information is asked of those who did not operate a farm in 2007.

Thiessen said Kansas Agricultural Statistics has been gathering the data for years and has built up a list of names of producers. He said a majority of the names of producers come from people's participation in government agriculture programs.

"We look everywhere," he said. "We're interested in building a good list because we're trying to do the best job we can in building agricultural statistics."

MEN | Young players improve play on way to solid Big 12 start

rebounder in the game against Texas A&M, said although some critics might see playing with significantly younger teammates as a disadvantage, it makes him better individually.

"I play against these guys every day in practice," Young said. "I know what they can do. I'm a pretty good defender and some of them are having to make me work on defense, so that's been helping me with my defense, and I know what they can do to other defenders."

One of those defenders is freshman forward Ron Anderson.

Anderson, who is second on the team in field-goal percentage with a 57-percent shooting average, said he and the rest of the freshmen recognize the level of play the Big 12 requires.

"When the Big 12 comes around, the competition gets a lot harder," Anderson said. "At our away game in Oklahoma, it was tough and we had to fight through it. Once the Big 12 comes, you can't get those games back. It's important to us to get that NCAA bid, so we just keep working every day in practice and try to be the best we can be."

Dietz leads K-State to victory in her senior season

Colorado native leads team in scoring, increasing production in Big 12 play

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's basketball team owes much of its seven-game win streak and 4-0 Big 12 Conference record to senior guard Kimberly Dietz.

Dietz is leading the Wildcats in scoring and has been pivotal to the team's recent success.

"Without Kimberly, we wouldn't have won these games," senior forward Shana Wheeler said. "She has definitely grown to be a huge factor."

Dietz, who has been averaging 14.4 points per game and 17.5 points per game in conference play, credits her teammates for her success this season, and for the team's recent achievements.

"All my teammates were working so well," Dietz said. "They are just hitting me when I'm open. It's been amazing. This team has played with so much heart."

K-State started conference play with an upset of Texas A&M in College Station, Texas, and then upset Texas in overtime in Austin. The Wildcats returned home where they beat Texas Tech and then upset Colorado.

Dietz, a native of Boulder, Colo., said beating the Buffaloes was special. However, winning the road games is what has stood out most to her.

"It's so hard to win on the road in the Big 12," she said.

Dietz said her biggest contribution to the team's recent success has been off the glass.

"I'm getting more rebounds. That's been my biggest goal," Dietz said. "If the team gets rebounds, we're going to win."

She is averaging 4.3 rebounds per game in conference play, which is almost a rebound and a half more per game than her season average.

Dietz said the team's attitude also has contributed to the winning streak.

"I think our disposition as a team has changed," she said. "We're done losing now."

While Dietz has been effective on the court recently, her success at K-State is not new. During the Texas State game on Dec. 16, 2007, she became the 33rd K-State women's basketball player to score 1,000 career points. She scored 22 points in the 90-52 win.

She said reaching 1,000 career points was important to her, and she was glad to be part of K-State history.

Coach Deb Patterson said she has noticed Dietz's contribution to the team's recent success.

"She's a great leader on the floor," Patterson said. She's been driving the ball well and making good decisions. Kimberly has just been a key factor to any success we've had."

Patterson said Dietz is the kind of player she likes to have in the game.

"Coaches dream of playing seniors," Patterson said.

Dietz played an average of almost 39 minutes per game. She played the entire game against Colorado and 44 minutes in the overtime win against Texas.

"Kim is a senior, and she is mentally tough," Patterson said. "She has always had a good fitness level. Most of all she has matured."

Dietz said she has enjoyed all the playing time.

"We've been working so hard," she said. "Coach [Patterson] decides who plays, and it's been an honor getting to play so much."

Throughout the success of her senior season, Dietz said overall her favorite thing has been playing home games with the support of fans.

"We've been winning, so we've been getting more fan support. They are the sixth man for us," Dietz said. "I love playing at Bramlage."

Senior guard Kimberly Dietz makes a move past a Colorado defender Jan. 19. K-State went on to win the game, 67-60.

Martin deserves fan support

He was just an assistant coach under Bob Huggins who was kept around to keep a stellar recruiting class intact. His only head coaching experience came when he was at Miami Senior High School.

We've heard the same argument time and again: Frank Martin isn't the guy to take the Wildcat basketball program to the next level. After being one of his skeptics, Martin convinced me Saturday that he's just what the Cats need.

EXHIBIT A

K-State was down 11-3 against the No. 10 basketball team in college basketball, and Texas A&M sophomore forward Bryan Davis committed a foul. With 14:56 left in the first half, it was time for the TV timeout. Both teams went to their respective benches.

As they left the huddle, a new Wildcat team stepped onto the hardwood. This team was energized, focused and sharp. K-State came back with an 11-3 run to tie the game at 14. Fans should commend Martin for getting his players back in the game.

EXHIBIT B

With 16:34 left in the first half, freshman forward Michael Beasley committed his second foul. Most coaches would sit their star player for the rest of the half in hopes of keeping him out of foul trouble for the second half.

Not Martin. He brilliantly used junior forward Darren Kent and Beasley in an offense-defense scheme that not only kept Beasley out of foul trouble but also kept the Wildcats in the game by allowing their greatest offensive threat to contribute.

EXHIBIT C

Coaches make their living off halftime and in-game adjustments. Martin is no different. The Aggies shot 46 percent from the field in the first half and held a 17-13 rebounding advantage. The Wildcats spent the majority of the first half in straight man-to-man defense, and the Wildcats led 35-33 at halftime.

During the second half, the Cats mixed up their defenses, alternating between a match-up zone, a 3-2 zone and man-to-man. Texas A&M looked confused and constantly was trying to guess what defense the Wildcats were in. A&M's field-goal percentage dropped to 38 percent for the game, and K-State held the final rebounding edge 29-23.

People who blame Martin for the Cats four losses seem to overlook one fact: they play seven freshmen. KU went through some of the same growing pains two years ago that K-State is going through now. They had an enormously talented recruiting class and began the year with high expectations.

The Jayhawks lost early games to Ball State, Arkansas and Nevada. They went on to win the Big 12 Conference Tournament and advanced to the second round of the NCAA Tournament before losing to Bradley. Now, two years later with the same corps of players, they are ranked No. 2 in the nation and are one of two undefeated teams in college basketball. The correlation is surprising.

It's not fair to jump to conclusions on this man before he has a chance to prove himself. Martin made a statement Saturday through his smart decisions and leadership. He is the right man for the job and is a big-time coach in the making.

K-State to graduate record number of math teachers

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Graham Ratzlaff, Jessi Linder and Tyler Stubenhofer, seniors in secondary math education, listen to Joey Heersche tell stories during dinner at Old Chicago.

By Joe Vossen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Most undergraduate students face many of the same anxieties: difficult classes, long hours of studying and worries about finding a job after graduation. But at least 31 seniors in the College of Education are not worried about finding that perfect job.

As secondary schools across Kansas and the United States face a shortage of math instructors, K-State will graduate one of its largest classes of secondary math education students in May.

Larry Scharmann, chairman of the Department of Secondary Education, said in an average year the College of Education awards degrees with math certifications to about 15 to 18 students. In May, as many as 31 future math teachers might walk across the commencement stage.

"With the shortage reported throughout the state, some people might call that a bumper crop," Scharmann said.

One instructor will remember this class not just for its size, but the promise these future teachers show in making a difference in students' lives.

Lori Martini, instructor of the Math Methods course at K-State, a class taken by secondary math education degree candidates before they student teach, worked closely with the 31 students set to graduate in the spring.

"I've got student teachers who are very strong in their social skills, and they're strong role models for kids," Martini said. "That's what excites me about this group — not only are they strong with content but they are strong with their interpersonal skills."

Last Thursday, four seniors in secondary math education met at Old Chicago to chat about their first week of student teaching.

Jessi Linder, senior in math education, was one of those students. She said the students meet often, and it was the friendships that grew between her and her fellow classmates that kept her focused and excited about becoming a teacher.

"We all banded together," Linder said. "They are what I'll remember from K-State. We saw each other almost every day in class, and we studied a couple nights a week together. That's what kept us going — we were a group, pushing each other along. I know it wouldn't have been as much fun without them."

Joey Heersche, senior in math education, first enrolled at K-State as a psychology major, but an experience between his first two semesters made him consider a change in curriculum.

"I went back [home] over Christmas break," Heersche said, "and my high school wrestling coach let me help coach the team. After talking with him I realized that what I wanted to do was teach. Math sounded appealing because I was good at math, and I knew it would get me a job, and coaching because I love working with kids."

Heersche said his course load at K-State kept him busy, but the help and advice of another teacher motivated him.

"At K-State, Dr. [Andrew] Bennett was a huge influence on my decision to be a math teacher," Heersche said. "He kept us going and provided help when we needed it."

Bennett is just one member of a faculty praised by its students. Graham Ratzlaff, senior in math education, said his department's skill in training future educators is its main strength.

"K-State has done a great job preparing me," Ratzlaff said. "The teacher education program at K-State gives you a lot of experience in the classroom, which I think is valuable. They can teach you about theory, but if you don't experience the classroom yourself you're not really going to know what to expect."

Many of the 31 seniors will spend their last semester as student teachers, shadowing local secondary instructors. Tyler Stubenhofer, senior in math education, teaches at Wamego Middle School.

"Student teaching has made me think about classroom management," Stubenhofer said. "Every day is different, and in other jobs every day is the same."

Stubenhofer, whose mother is a math teacher, said this day-to-day variety appeals to him. Soon he will have a classroom of his own, and he and his classmates will get the chance to interact with students — and maybe some future teachers — each day.

"It will be rewarding to know I'm making a difference in the world," Stubenhofer said.

Woman injured in incident

By Allison Voris
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Manhattan woman was injured during an alleged aggravated burglary at her home in the University Crossing Apartments on Monday, according to a Riley County Police report.

RCPD Lt. Kurt Moldrup said the 21-year-old woman suffered a cut on her left mid-forearm by a box cutter she was holding while trying to force a man out of her home. The man allegedly entered the woman's locked apartment around 12:45 a.m. According to RCPD reports, the woman did not know the suspect but had met him at Bobby T's Bar and Grill.

Moldrup said the suspect was described as a white male about 6-foot-4 inches tall who weighed approximately 190 pounds, with brown hair and between the ages of 20 and 30. The suspect was last seen wearing a green fleece pull-over, blue jeans and red and white tennis shoes.

The woman received stitches for her injury at Mercy Regional Health Center, according to RCPD reports.

Homeless shelter to expand this summer

By Sasha Harden
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan has a growing number of residents seeking shelter with few places to hold these people.

One solution to the space problem is a new shelter, located at 416 Fourth St. The new shelter is under construction and should be operational this summer. A press conference is scheduled for Jan. 31 to award two grants to the Manhattan Emergency shelter for their work in combating homelessness in the Manhattan area. Community members looking to offer support can contact the shelter to learn about "Adopt a Room" and other ways to help.

Another one of the solutions is the homeless outreach sponsored by Pawnee Mental Health. Jennifer White, a homeless outreach case manager, has been working with the program since August 2007.

The outreach program is designed to specifically target those individuals who might have a mental illness, and as a result, are homeless. White explained the service helps people find resources and mental health services.

"I can't necessarily say [homelessness] has increased or decreased, but the word is getting out there and people are seeking help," White said.

White suggests people help by volunteering at shelters and donating items to any social service program, including the shelter and Pawnee Mental Health.

"[People need to] be more aware of what is going on. People aren't aware of the homeless population in Manhattan," White said. "Students need to be aware too, because there are lots of students who don't have a place to call home."

Mandy Chapman Semple, executive director of the Emergency Shelter, said she

Students come together for documentary on historic black-rights milestone

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students replicated the diversity Americans fought for during the Civil Rights Movement by sitting side-by-side in the K-State Student Union Grand Ballroom on Wednesday afternoon.

The students attended a civil rights matinee movie, "February One: The Greensboro Four," sponsored by the Martin Luther King Jr. Committee in honor of MLK Observation Week.

The movie portrayed the true story of four black friends in the 1960s from Greensboro, N.C., who took a stand by sitting in a diner designated only for white people. Their movement influenced other similar movements to start throughout the nation.

On July 26, 1960, the diner decided to integrate and the Greensboro four had accomplished what they wanted all along — to be seen as people.

Mirta Chavez, director of multicultural programs and services, said the movie was chosen to show a different side of what black students went through in that era.

"I think K-State students will appreciate a little bit of the knowledge that they would not have gotten otherwise if we hadn't played this movie," Chavez said. "Our office is all about educating, regarding what has happened in the past."

The movie was shown during the lunch hour and concessions were sold for $5. Chavez said the planning committee decided to show the movie at this time because students were already on campus.

More than 150 students were in attendance.

Ashley Glover, freshman in political science, said she was inspired by the movie.

"It really showed me that an act of bravery and standing up for what you believe in will go a long way," Glover said.

Dawn Wall, technology coordinator for Career and Employment Services, and DeJ Owens, CES administrative specialist, watch "February One: The Story of the Greensboro Four" Wednesday afternoon in the K-State Student Union.

Emily Surdez, freshman in agriculture education, said the movie was eye-opening.

"I think more people need to see it and realize how much of a difference one person can actually make," Surdez said. "Sometimes you think you are just one person and that you can't make a difference, but you actually can."

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new gallery at Manhattan Town Center features 52 portraits of children seeking adoption.

In its fourth consecutive year, the Kansas Children's Service League and the Kansas Professional Photographers Association have joined together to present "Klicks for Kids," a traveling photography exhibit featuring Kansas children in foster care needing adoption.

"There is a tremendous need for adoptive and foster parents both nationwide and here in Kansas," said Gail Zeyasing, KSCL's North Central Region director. "Klicks for Kids" is a wonderful opportunity to introduce adoption, as well as some of the children who need forever families, to Kansans across the state."

Exhibits like this one in Manhattan could help remedy the problem. About 25 percent of children who participate in the program find an adoptive home, giving the children some hope they will find a family, according to Kansas Children's Service League.

Throughout 2008, there will be exhibits in 25 Kansas communities, featuring the work of some of Kansas' most talented photographers.

Alan Honey, owner of Alan Honey Photography, has been involved with the program for three years. He said he appreciates being involved with a program where he can use his skills to benefit the lives of children.

"It's just a good feeling to be able to help some way, rather than donating money to something that I don't know how its going to be spent," Honey said. "It's nice to see the tangible benefit of something I do. It's nice to do something, to help a cause, to help somebody."

From behind his camera lens, Honey said sometimes

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

Looking at the "Klicks for Kids" display, Shay Garvin, Manhattan High School senior, reads the stories of Kansas kids waiting to be adopted. The gallery-style event was a combined effort of the Kansas Service League and the Kansas Professional Photographer's Association to find families for more than 900 Kansas kids. The exhibit will be touring the state throughout the year.

it's a challenge to photograph children who have a difficult upbringing. Some of the children are more difficult to photograph than others, most likely because of their emotional states.

"They probably feel beaten down or neglected. They didn't have eye contact, but you have to get to know them, joke around, gain a little bit of trust," Honey said. "Maybe in the past, they didn't trust adults. Maybe they didn't smile more easily than others. It runs from the pretty typical child session to real difficult, just to have them look at the camera in a more typical way."

Though some of the portraits might be difficult to turn out, the 52 children represent various ethnic backgrounds, hobbies and academic interests are featured in the gallery.

Despite their differences, they all want a parent, and the Kansas Children's Service League remains hopeful it will fulfill the dreams of these 52 children.

"When you look at these portraits, you can see that they are just kids and what they want is what every child deserves — a family, a home, someone to love them," said Tina Long, communications director of Kansas Children's Service League in Manhattan.

Though several mall patrons have visited the gallery, Long said it is a challenge to help every child, but any effort is better than none at all.

"It's more difficult to find homes for older children who have some special needs, so this is about a little extra recruitment effort to find families for these children," Long said. "We want to find them a home."

The "Klicks for Kids" exhibit is in the Manhattan Town Center until Jan. 29. Anyone with questions about adoption can talk to the Kansas Children's Service League staff members. They will be available from 1 to 3 p.m. this Saturday at the Manhattan Town Center.

SGA to vote on student privilege fee increase

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An increase in the student activity fee and the Office of Student Activities and Services privilege fee will be decided on by members of the Student Governing Association tonight at the Student Senate meeting.

"[The student activity fee] was reduced the last time it was reviewed," said Clint Blaes, privilege fee chairman. "Now we're just bringing it back up to what we're spending."

Blaes said the Women's Center also will benefit from the increase.

He said the fee will generate 37 percent more funds for campus-wide organizations. Students do not need to worry about paying too much more, as the increase per student will be less than $1.

Allocations to several student groups and additional campus organization funding from reserves are also on the agenda.

Newly introduced legislation will include commendations to the KSU Horse Judging Team and the K-State Crops Team, and resolutions to support a Campus Commitment to Sustainability and the K-State Proud Campaign.

"I think [the K-State PROUD Campaign] is a great way to support our fellow students at K-State," said Lydia Peele, student body vice president. "Especially after the success we had last year. We can see the difference those donations are making."

Candidates should address issues, not fight

With presidential primary season and the quest for party nominations well underway, the campaign trail gets a little dirtier every day. Only a few caucuses down and a long nomination process ahead of us, we already are seeing too much character assassination and too little discussion of ideas.

The 2008 campaign already is predicted to be the "dirtiest presidential campaign in history," according to an ABC "20/20" news report; very fitting with the trend in national politics.

Though much has been said about the general decline of civility in U.S. politics, the trend I find particularly disturbing is the tendency to demonize one's opponents. By this I mean the tendency to attack the character of those with whom one disagrees rather than to debate the merits of their position.

While such character assassination has been around since humans first had cause to disagree with one another, it seems it has become more prevalent. Consider, for example, the tone of discourse exhibited by presidential candidates. All too often, exchanges between and even within the political parties deteriorate into character assassination and dirty campaigning.

In an interview on "NOW" on PBS, veteran campaign strategist Rod Shealy said, "[The] challenge as a campaign is to damage your opponent without getting caught doing it." This is indicative of the trend in U.S. politics.

There are several reasons why this should be concerning, but the most pressing is this: when we fail to engage in the thoughtful examination and discussion of ideas and seek instead to reach our goals through personal attacks, the democratic process itself becomes corrupted.

Democracy is founded on the idea of government for and by the people. But we, the people, cannot make informed decisions as they relate to the governing of our country unless we have considered and understood all sides of an issue. It seems truth seeking and the genuine desire to debate ideas in an effort to find viable solutions have fallen by the wayside, replaced by the insatiable need to win.

This is exemplified by the fact that the presidential candidates appear to spend more time discussing their opponents than discussing their ideas.

According to an article written by John Dickerson of Slate magazine, candidates spent more time in the weeks leading up to the Nevada primaries accusing each other of dirty tactics than they did campaigning. How can voters be expected to choose the candidate who best represents their hopes and ideas for the future when all they have heard discussed is each candidate's sordid past?

It is beneath us as a people to sink to such low tactics as attacking one another's religious beliefs and personal character. And it is certainly beneath those who aspire to the highest office in the land.

Presidential campaigns should be a platform for high-minded debate and the discussion of issues and ideas which will determine the direction of our nation. We should expect more of our future president, whomever they might be, than mudslinging and push polling.

People should follow examples of nonviolence

On Monday, our nation took a little vacation to honor the son of a Baptist minister and a schoolteacher from Atlanta, Ga. His name was Martin Luther King Jr., and his life has been taught to us since the earliest years of elementary school.

The danger with being taught such important history at such a young age is that over time the information becomes tame and simply the material of legend. King was an extremely hardworking individual who lived by the increasingly rare principles of faith and vision. These were based on the principles of the life of Jesus Christ found in the gospels, and on Mahatma Gandhi.

We must go past the vague generalities of our younger years and re-study his life. Our nation is a drastically better place because of King's influence, words and convictions. As a columnist I take to heart what King said, "Our lives begin to end the day we become silent about things that matter."

As a Baptist preacher, King lived what he preached. He first achieved national recognition when he helped mobilize the boycott of the Montgomery bus system in 1955 following Rosa Parks' now well-known refusal to move to the back of the bus. King earned his first great victory as a civil-rights leader when Montgomery buses desegregated the following year.

King would go on to found the Southern Christian Leadership conference, which mobilized black churches to conduct nonviolent protests. King would follow in this tradition for the rest of his short life.

One of the most striking examples of King's life is the stark contrast of his teachings of nonviolence compared to that of the Vietnam War. As our nation became increasingly agitated by the war, the violent mentality carried over into the civil-rights movement. Contemporaries of King like Malcolm X thought violence was the quickest and surest way of obtaining equality. King did not budge, and that eventually cost him his life in 1968. King stood like a rock against the constant threat of violence that threatened to blow up the movement he helped start.

King said it much better than I can: "Violence as a way of achieving racial justice is both impractical and immoral. It is impractical because it is a descending spiral ending in destruction for all. It is immoral because it seeks to humiliate the opponent rather than win his understanding; it seeks to annihilate rather than to convert. Violence is immoral because it thrives on hatred rather than love."

Our nation does itself a disservice by naming schools, roads and buildings after him in predominately African-American areas of the country. His name and his legacy should be celebrated in the suburbs as much as in the projects, and our nation should be bold in proclaiming the example of King to every person in the United States without regard to the color of their skin.

For more on the legacy of King, I recommend looking up his profile on Time magazine's Web site, www.time.com, appropriately found under the "Time 100 most influential people of the century."

I leave you with the words of King in his 1964 Nobel Prize acceptance speech: "Nonviolence is the answer to the crucial political and moral questions of our time: The need for man to overcome oppression and violence without resorting to oppression and violence. Man must evolve for all human conflict a method which rejects revenge, aggression and retaliation. The foundation of such a method is love."

TO THE POINT

Graduating math teachers needed in sparse field of instructors

Becoming a math teacher does not add up. As K-State will graduate a record number of math teachers this spring, one has to wonder: Why would anybody want to become a math teacher? Math teachers are sometimes stereotyped as teachers who do not care about their students, go over material way too fast, and create an intense environment for slow learners. With all this said, it is encouraging that students still want to earn a degree in math education.

Their efforts are applauded, but math teachers still have plenty of challenges ahead. But are these math teachers from K-State and across the country ready for the challenges? The U.S. Department of Education conducted a survey in 2007 about differences in elementary students math scores state to state. Compared with a previous survey in 2005, Kansas improved its math test scores at grade eight but not at the high school level. This is the level that needs the most improvement. The tests examined different mathematics content in a variety of areas. According to the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics, in the United States approximately 1.8 million elementary school and 225,000 secondary school math teachers are needed. With a need this large, the national council might need to come up with some great solutions to its big problem. The answer to the problem only will come with time, if the new teachers make a difference in test scores and retention rates and improve the stereotype of math teachers, then they are bound to make an improvement in math education. Hopefully a few K-State graduates will become part of the solution.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

City's air, water clear, healthy for residents

By Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan provides its residents with clean air and water and a safe environment.

Tom Gross, acting bureau chief for the Bureau of Air and Radiation within the Kansas Department of Health and Environment, said since Manhattan is a smaller city there are no monitoring systems that check the air. However, as a state, the air quality seems to be improving because air regulations are becoming more strict.

"We think it is important to maintain clean air in Kansas because air pollution affects the young and old," Gross said.

Gross said the Kansas City area meets standards of clean air as do other regions in Kansas.

There are continuous monitoring devices that check the air around the state, Gross said.

Pollutants in the air come from automobiles and industries, but it depends on individual cities in determining the biggest contributor of air pollution.

"If people are worried about the air they could take a bus, ride a bike or buy energy-efficient products to help the environment," Gross said.

Reducing the use of wood-burning fireplaces is an example to help prevent more pollutants in the air, said Steven Galitzer, director of the K-State Department of Environmental Health and Safety.

Galitzer has lived in bigger cities that had poor air quality, and he said he thought Manhattan had clean air.

"The air in Manhattan is good since there are no big industries sending out stuff in the air," Galitzer said. "In comparison to other Kansas cities, there is not the kind of haze here you would find in other places."

Galitzer said as Manhattan grows into a bigger city with a bigger population, there might be more car emissions and light pollution in the air.

On campus, there is an air quality permit that looks at all emissions produced on campus and calculates what is being put into the air. Galitzer said the campus had good air because there were no emissions produced beyond the permit's regulations.

Water on campus is also safe to drink because it is tested, Galitzer said.

Galitzer said people have called him with concerns about old buildings that had discolored water, but he assured them if they let the water run it would become clear and safe to drink.

The water is brown at times because it has iron in it, Galitzer said. It is safe because there is not a large amount of iron present. All the older pipe systems on campus have been tested to ensure clean water.

"The water on campus has no true health hazards by the sanitation code," Galitzer said.

In Manhattan, Jerry McIntyre, deputy director of Public Works, said water is clean and treated.

"The water is regulated by the state's Department of Health and Environment as safe to drink," McIntyre said.

McIntyre said since Manhattan is bigger than some Kansas cities, there are more sophisticated systems treating the water and softening the water.

"Softening the water is removing the hardness of water, which is removing minerals such as calcium and magnesium," McIntyre said.

McIntyre said drinking water with calcium and magnesium are not hazardous to a person's health, but they are removed for washing purposes.

"Water in Manhattan is high quality," McIntyre said.

Student hopes to end poverty, attract K-Staters to group

By David Griffin Jr.
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One person dies every three seconds from poverty, hunger, lack of clean water and/or HIV/AIDS, said the president of the K-State chapter of a poverty-fighting organization.

David Westfall, graduate student in sociology and president of the K-State chapter of the organization ONE, recently joined more than 120 student activists from across the United States at a special summit on ending poverty, the ONE Power 100 Summit from Jan. 2-5, in Washington, D.C.

Westfall came back to campus inspired to get students involved in the ONE Campus Challenge. The challenge is to get universities connected with the national ONE campaign by participating in more than 100 activities, which earn universities points. The top 10 universities will be included in an all-university vote to earn a concert by a top recording artist at the winning campus.

Amanda Staats, freshman in pre-professional business administration and a member of the organization of ONE, said it is an easy way to change the world.

"People should try [the ONE organization] because it's a simple way to make a difference and get the message out there," Staats said.

Westfall will recruit students to participate in the activities during the chapter's first meeting at 5:30 p.m. Jan. 29 in the K-State Student Union Food Court.

The K-State chapter will work with surrounding universities like Kansas, Missouri, Colorado and Missouri State. The chapter is ranked No. 26 out of 1,300 active universities.

Westfall said he fosters a passion about raising awareness at different universities to connect to the larger campaign.

"Here at K-State we have a large group of passionate people," Westfall said. "The problem is people don't know about the issues. Even though we have our problems here, there's a larger picture at hand."

He said there are Americans who are impoverished, and the government needs to get involved.

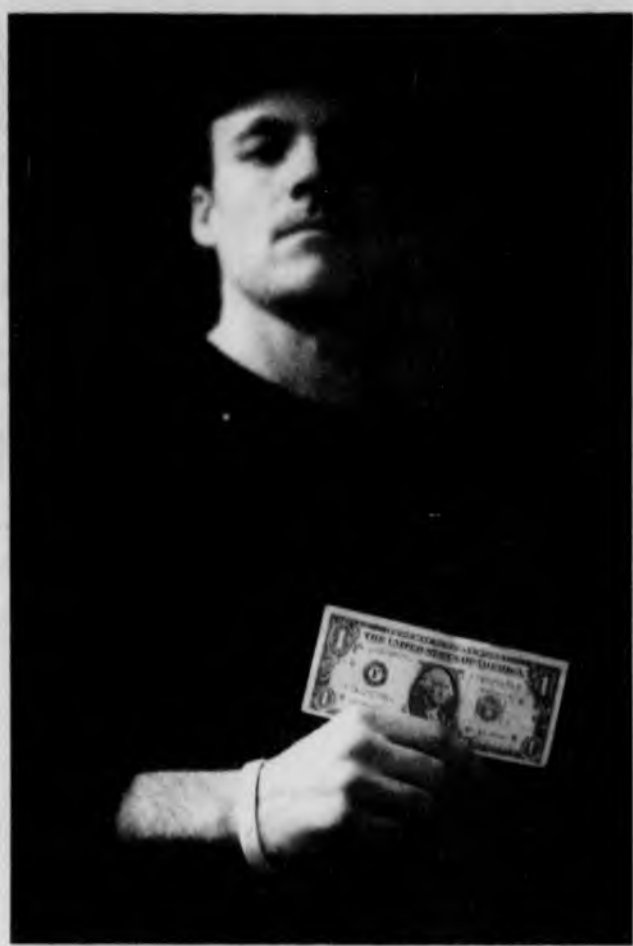

Westfall said the ONE campaign is nonpartisan.

"There is only ONE side to the fight against poverty," he said.

There are 2.5 million members involved with the ONE campaign worldwide. More than 100 of the most respected nonprofit organizations are working toward achieving the eight millennium development goals: end hunger, establish universal education, gender equity, child health, maternal health, combat HIV/AIDS, environmental sustainability and global partnership, according to the organization's Web site.

More than 188 countries have signed on to work toward these goals to end global poverty, Westfall said.

Less than 1 percent of the US budget is spent on issues like poverty. With presidential calls, some candidates have promised to do nate more than $50 billion. Supporters also include U2 singer Bono and former Senate Majority Leaders Bill Frist and Tom Daschle, Westfall said.

The International Monitor Fund had to shut its Web site down because of the amount of e-mails it received and because of the lack of ability to respond to everyone, Westfall said.

"This chapter will go a long way with the help from the national chapter and the students on our campus," Staats said.

NFL's big game a 'Super' bust

As I watched the NFL Conference Championships last weekend, I realized a lot of people's hearts were crushed because the Super Bowl that many viewers wanted to see isn't going to happen.

I was rooting for the Green Bay Packers and the San Diego Chargers to play in Super Bowl XLII because I am not a fan of Eli Manning and the New York Giants or the New England Patriots. I am a fan of Randy Moss, and if I was in his position, I would have bolted from the Oakland Raiders to go to a dominating team like the Patriots as well.

I have never liked the Patriots, even before they were winning Super Bowls, simply because of who is representing their team.

Seriously, what kind of head coach cuts off the sleeves of a hooded sweatshirt and thinks he looks respectable?

Safety Rodney Harrison is one of the dirtiest players in the game, but he is good, so I respect him. The Patriots beat former K-State star running back Darren Sproles and the San Diego Chargers. Unfortunately, this took away any possibility of a former Wildcat winning a ring this year.

The Super Bowl is supposed to be a marquee match-up everyone wants to see. Every year, this game is watched with great interest worldwide on the first Sunday of February. It would have been much more entertaining to see the gun-slinger Brett Favre try to upend the unbeaten Patriots in the championship. In fact, the last time Favre played the Patriots in the Super Bowl, he won.

This Super Bowl, however, could be the most boring Super Bowl since I was born. Plus, no one should want to watch a rematch of teams who just played in week 17.

The game that solidified the Patriots' perfect regular season was a close call, but the Super Bowl in Arizona will be the polar opposite. The Giants had all the advantages the last time these two teams met, and they failed to get a victory. This game will not be pretty if you're a Giants fan. Cold weather has slowed the Patriots' offense this season, but the Giants can no longer depend on the road terror they have been on.

The Patriots are going to come out wanting to avenge one of their closest calls to a loss this year, and as much as I hate to admit it, I have a feeling it is destiny for us to see them run the table.

I'm thinking the Patriots win by more than three touchdowns and become the first team in NFL history to finish a perfect season with a record of 19-0.

Women improve record to 5-0 in Big 12 conference play

By Mike DeVader
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It took junior guard Shalee Lehning and the Wildcats just seven seconds to crush any hopes Iowa State had of getting a win.

Lehning hit a 3-point shot on the opening possession and K-State was off and running to a 80-49 victory at Bramlage Coliseum. Senior guard Kimberly Dietz led the Wildcats once again in scoring with 16 points and two assists. Not too far off was Lehning, who had another double-double, dropping 12 points and 10 assists. Junior forward Marlies Gipson also had 12 points while senior forward Shana Wheeler added nine.

K-State (13-5, 5-0 Big 12 Conference) has been a good three-point shooting team this year, but on Wednesday, affinity for making shots behind the arc was even higher. The Wildcats hit 12 of 21, which amounted to 57.1 percent. Coach Deb Patterson said the Wildcats shot well, and the amount of threes hit in this game has been a reoccurring theme when the Wildcats and Cyclones play.

"When Iowa State and Kansas State play, it's likely to see a fair number of threes," Patterson said. "The team played well together on the offensive end, and we made good decisions tonight."

K-State played stifling defense the whole game, going on runs of 14-0 and 17-0, one in each half of play. The Wildcats are 5-0 in conference play for the first time since the 2002-2003 season.

K-State held the Cyclones to only 36-percent shooting for the game and 30.8 percent from behind the arc. Patterson said she was pleased with the style of defense the Wildcats played in the game.

"Defensively, we brought a great effort to the floor," Patterson said. "Defensively, we thought we defended the three-ball."

K-State is ranked at the top of the conference standings with Baylor, who is also 5-0 in the Big 12. K-State will face Oklahoma State in Stillwater, Okla., Sunday. The Cowboys are fresh off their 70-63 victory over Texas on Wednesday and are 4-1 in conference play.

Though K-State received a No. 22 ranking by the Associated Press last week, Lehning said the team isn't letting its ranking change the game plan.

"[Oklahoma State] is a tough and disciplined team," Lehning said. "We have the same focus we've had - being ranked doesn't mean anything at this point."

Marlies Gipson shoots over an Iowa State defensive player. Gipson had her fifth double-double of the season, adding 12 points and 13 rebounds in the Wildcat victory.

K-State rolls to 3-0 conference record, defeats 1-3 Colorado on road

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Freshman forward Michael Beasley was nine of 17 from the floor and logged 29 points to lead K-State to a 72-56 win over Colorado in Boulder.

Beasley, who also had 13 rebounds, was joined in double figures in scoring by freshman forward Bill Walker, who had 18 points and was five of six from the free-throw line.

Colorado played K-State close in the first half, taking the lead with 14:10 left in the first half. K-State responded and went on a 25-1 scoring streak that ate up six minutes of the clock. Colorado closed the gap to eight at the end of the first half, capped off by a field goal from senior guard Richard Roby with 30 seconds left.

In the second half, Colorado trimmed the K-State lead, coming within four with 17:48 left. Beasley responded once again, getting 26 of his 29 points in the second half. Out of the next 12 K-State points, Beasley scored eight. K-State's largest lead was 20 when Beasley made a layup with 1:23 left to make the score 72-52.

Colorado was led in scoring by Roby who had 27 points. Roby, who has been averaging 16 points and six rebounds this season, also had nine rebounds. He has reached 27 points in two other games this season: against Tulsa on Jan. 7 and New Orleans on Dec. 12.

Also in double-figures for the Buffaloes was freshman guard Cory Higgins who had 10 points. Higgins has been averaging eight points per game and four rebounds.

K-State was 21-of-29 from the free-throw line, which was considerably better than Colorado. The Buffaloes went to the line 31 times and only converted 17 attempts.

Wednesday's game was the first time since the Xavier game on Dec. 31 that the Wildcats have shot less than 50 percent from field-goal range for the game. K-State shot 42 percent from the floor and was 27 percent from beyond the arc.

on the year and is 3-0 in the Big 12 Conference. The last time K-State was 3-0 in conference play was during the 1987-1988 season. Colorado falls to 9-9 on the year and 1-3 in Big 12 play. K-State will face Iowa State at 5 p.m. Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum.

Beasley on watch list of several season awards

K-State's standout freshman forward Michael Beasley has come out on top of two more collegiate awards watch lists.

Beasley was voted to the No. 1 spot on the Wooden Watch this week. The Wooden Watch is a weekly prediction of who will prevail at the end of the season as the NCAA's most outstanding player. The Wooden Award is awarded based on a vote from a panel that includes college basketball analysts, writers and columnists. This is the first week Beasley has been ranked No. 1 on the list.

Beasley was also named to the Naismith Trophy mid-season 30 list. The list, which is comprised of the best 30 players in the NCAA, is voted on by a "voting academy," which is comprised of basketball writers, coaches and administrators around the country. When the academy released its preseason list, Beasley could not be voted onto the watch list. Last season, the Naismith Trophy went to a freshman for the first time in the history of the award - Texas' Kevin Durant. The Naismith Trophy will be presented following the NCAA Tournament and will have fan votes factored in with the academy's final ballots.

IUPUI's Hunter to coach barefoot to raise awareness

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — For once, Ron Hunter won't be able to stomp.

Hunter will coach barefoot in IUPUI's game against Oakland University on Thursday to raise awareness for children in need. His goal is to send 40,000 pairs of shoes to Africa in honor of the 40th anniversary of the death of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

"If a five- or six-year-old kid can walk around their entire life with no shoes on, then surely, in a warm climate, in a basketball environment, I can do it," he said. "They may not hear my stomps like they usually do."

Hunter is working through a Charlotte, N.C., charitable organization called Samaritan's Feet, which was founded four years ago by Emmanuel "Manny" Ohonme.

A native of Nigeria, Ohonme received his first pair of shoes at the age of 9 from an American missionary. He eventually earned a scholarship to play basketball at Lake Region State College in North Dakota.

Samaritan's Feet wants to send 10 million pairs of shoes to children around the world in 10 years.

Hunter said he learned about Samaritan's Feet after a mutual friend gave his number to Ohonme. Samaritan's Feet came up with the idea for Hunter to go without shoes.

"They told me the idea, and at first I kind of laughed, because I thought surely they were joking about that," he said. "But they weren't."

Then, Hunter remembered a recruiting trip to Lagos, Nigeria, four years ago, where he saw examples of extreme poverty. That, the call from Ohonme and prayer were enough to persuade him to go shoeless for a night.

Hunter told his team about the mission, and it moved freshman Christian Siakam, who is from Cameroon.

"He said a lot of college athletes, when they get their free pair of shoes, they take those things for granted. There's so many kids, including people in his family, that don't have shoes. It's hitting home with him," Hunter said.

EXPLOSION IN BAGHDAD KILLS 17

BAGHDAD — A thunderous blast tore through a vacant apartment building in northern Iraq on Wednesday, killing at least 17 civilians and wounding more than 130 in adjacent houses just minutes after the Iraqi army arrived to investigate tips about a weapons cache.

Rescue crews searched under toppled walls, collapsed ceilings and piles of debris tossed by the explosion that blew apart the empty building, which Iraqi authorities said was used by insurgents to stash weapons and bombs.

The hunt through the wreckage stretched for hours, raising the possibility the final casualty toll could climb. The huge blast went off just after the troops arrived, and no soldier was reported killed.

Instead, the explosion ravaged dozens of old homes and collapsed a three-story building in a mostly Sunni neighborhood in Mosul, about 225 miles northwest of Baghdad.

The blast also reinforced U.S. claims this week that Mosul — Iraq's third-largest city — is now the last urban center with a strong presence of al-Qaida in Iraq. American and Iraqi forces have been on the offensive against insurgents in and around Baghdad, but Mosul continues to be a center of gravity for al-Qaida in Iraq, according to the military.

AFGHAN PRESIDENT WARNS OF INSTABILITY

DAVOS, Switzerland — Afghanistan's president warned Wednesday that the whole world could suffer from the "wildfire" of terrorism engulfing his region, a grim message for a meeting of political and business leaders already fretting over the threat of global recession.

Formally opening the World Economic Forum, Hamid Karzai gave a sobering rundown of recent attacks attributed to Islamic extremists — among them the assassination of Benazir Bhutto and bombings in Afghanistan and Pakistan that have killed hundreds, including many children.

With militant violence still on the rise in the two nations six years after the ouster of the Taliban, "it seems like the mutant of extremism is dangerously unleashed across the region," Karzai said. The trend "bodes terribly badly for the whole world," he said.

In an apparent allusion to Pakistan — whose president, Pervez Musharraf, originally supported the Taliban — Karzai called terrorism "a venomous snake that some among us tried to nurture and befriend at the expense of others, which I hope we realize now was a mistake."

AFGHAN JOURNALIST SENTENCED TO DEATH FOR BROTHER'S CRIME

KABUL, Afghanistan — An Afghan journalist who was sentenced to death for distributing an article about Islam and women's rights is actually being punished for his brother's reporting on abuses by warlords, a media group said Wednesday.

Sayed Parwez Kaambakhsh, 23, was sentenced to death Tuesday by a three-judge panel in the northern city of Mazar-i-Sharif for distributing a report he printed off the Internet to fellow journalism students at Balkh University.

The article asks why men can have four wives but women can't have multiple husbands. It was written in the Iranian language of Farsi, which is similar to the Afghan language of Dari.

The judges said the article humiliated Islam, and members of a clerics council had pushed for Kaambakhsh to be punished. The case now goes to the first of two appeals courts.

Jean MacKenzie, country director for the Institute for War and Peace Reporting, which helps train Afghan journalists, said Kaambakhsh was being punished for stories written for IWPR by his brother, Sayed Yaqub Ibrahim.

"We feel very strongly that this is a complete fabrication on the part of the authorities up in Mazar, designed to put pressure on Parwez' brother Yaqub, who has done some of the hardest-hitting pieces outlining abuses by some very powerful commanders in Balkh and the other northern provinces," MacKenzie said.

has noted a significant increase in the occurrence of homelessness in Manhattan, especially in the last two years.

"[Homelessness is] hard to measure, but we have been at capacity and have turned away more than 400 people in the past two years," Semple said.

Semple also said the need for proper shelter is much greater now and the shelter is seeing more families in distress. Several factors contribute to the rise of homelessness, including lack of affordable housing, shortage of daycare and wages that are too low to accommodate cost of living, she said.

"We are trying to look at creating solutions, and we need support from the community," Semple said.

Ringing in the new year

New technology improving, making way to market in 2008

By Brandon McAtee
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Every year brings new and exciting gadgets especially in this rapidly growing technological world. This year is no different, especially with items geared toward college students.

Many students can be seen around campus plugged in to their MP3 players, and two companies making the biggest splashes with these players are Apple, with their new iPods, and Microsoft, with the Zune.

Joe Geske, senior customer assistant at Best Buy and sophomore in fine arts, said the iPod and Zune make up more than 50 percent of the market. Both are priced the same and start at a four-gigabyte size, which can hold about 1,000 songs. Many of them have video-playing capabilities and can hold up to 80 gigabytes of space.

The two companies use similar software to purchase and place content on the players with Apple's iTunes and Microsoft's Zune Marketplace. The companies now offer a new service through their softwares that allow users to connect their device to a computer and rent movies online.

The differences between these MP3 players stand out mostly with the Zune. It has a built-in FM radio and connects wirelessly to add songs, while the iPod offers a touch-screen interface. An accessory to look out for with the iPod is the new stereo that can serve as a dock, which has wireless speakers with a battery life of five hours.

"You can literally take the speakers with you to the floor below you in the dorms, and they still work," Geske.

Geske also said more people are buying the iPod, but for a week in December the Zune was outselling the iPod, marking the first time since the Zune's release.

Laptops remain convenient for students, and Lee Overlay, general manager of Staples, said there are two laptops that fit a typical college student's life.

The 2737 US Pavillion, which has the fastest AMD processor available, will connect to all types of wireless connections. It also includes a CD/DVD burner, three gigabytes of RAM, a 250-gigabyte hard drive, and a built in Web cam.

"It has become very popular with soldiers so they have one less item to take with them," Overlay said of the Pavillion.

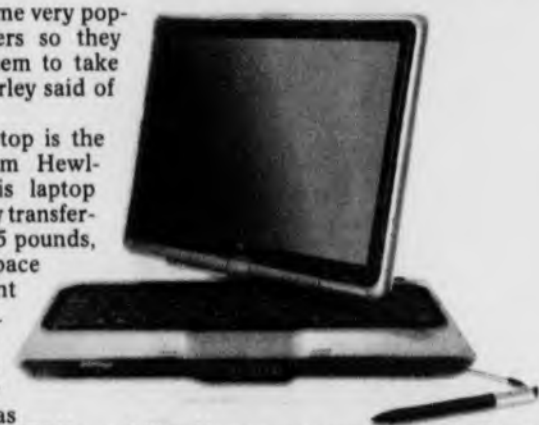

Another laptop is the HDX 9010 from Hewlett-Packard. This laptop might not be very transferable, as it is 15.5 pounds, but it will save space in any apartment or dorm room.

It has a 20-inch screen that is movable or lockable, and has a HD tuner and HDMI capability. Users can record on it, similar to a DVR or watch a Blue Ray movie. The system has two separate 120-gigabyte hard drives, so users can save music or other media on one, and work on the other, to keep it from slowing down.

"This laptop could be your television, radio, music player and movie player in one," Overlay said.

He also pointed out DLP projectors as a hot new item, which display High Definition television on the wall, making a very large viewing area.

Another hot-selling item lately are global positioning systems for cars, which give directions, among other information. Overlay said they were their best-selling items during Christmas, despite the high prices. New features on these items include text-to-speech - which will tell drivers the street name to turn on - and a touch screen that a driver or passenger can scroll through the map with their finger.

ASK THE FIFTH YEAR

Ask a fifth year answers questions about resolutions

1. Stop stealing from my friends.

Dustin, Nick, Eric, Joe - I have a phone charger that belongs to one of you, I just don't know whom. I just have this attraction toward shiny things.

ADAM REICHENBERGER

2. Go to the rec.

Butz N' Gutz, Pilates, maybe even Spintacular if I'm feeling extra adventurous. I just have to know what all the fuss is about. So ladies, if you see a hairy, sweaty guy in one of your classes, just know he's not there to "pick you up." I wasn't blessed with that talent.

No, I'm just there to learn.

3. Stop answering my sister's phone calls.

I got this call the other day. "Adam, guess what?" "You're pregnant ... ?" "No, I was watching this fashion show, and they said hairy chests are in!"

4. Fix the sink.

My friend Tony said to me the other day, "Adam, sometimes they don't need you to fix the faucet," referring to women, "they just want you to listen to the leak." Philosophical genius. Except that I truly do need to fix this beautiful girl's sink. I was working on it the other day, and the hot water shot straight up through the cabinet above. I get my hands over it and water's still spraying everywhere, babies are crying, dogs are barking, a window shatters, in the distance I hear a train whistle and an old lady cry out in terror, "Halal! Halal!" (Yes, my fictitious old women scream like Bugs Bunny.) And she just sits there smiling pretty, looking at me like the idiot I am. So I figure I should take care of that.

5. Reverse engineer the Duraflame Any Time Fire Log to cure world-hunger.

If Jesus were to endorse a fire log, this would be the one. I'm not kidding. This thing's amazing. And apparently, now they have this Duraflame Ultra. I get chills just thinking about it. I can't wait.

6. Get "American Gladiators" canceled.

Don't get me wrong -

I love that they brought the show back. I don't see why they got rid of it in the first place. There's no way it was losing money. But after watching the first few episodes, I can't help but feel disappointed. I'm still going to watch it, of course, but why not bring back the classics? I'm just saying, Nitro and Gemini would make Titan and Mayhem look like gentle bunnies.

7. Stop referring to women as "broad."

8. Take advantage of the Student Union's Ride Board. Rider Wanted. Where: anywhere. When: anytime. Conditions: rub my upper thigh the whole trip. You would figure after five years of posting that someone would have called. That's a free ride, people. And let's be honest, it's just a thigh.

9. Figure out how I'm still alive.

It baffles me.

10. Find a mother for my unborn British baby.

It's not like I've got anything better to do.

11. Stop being so judgmental.

I might tell you, "Nice boots," but internally I'm laughing ... hard.

12. Find my acorns.

New text messaging system alerts students of local emergencies

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jessica Heath, junior in family studies and human services, said text messages are one of the best ways to contact students.

"Most people have their phone on them all the time and it is easier to access than a computer might be," Heath said. "People are more likely to check their phones than their e-mail," she said.

Now students, faculty and staff can be notified almost simultaneously via text message the next time an emergency takes place. The optional service became available on Jan. 18.

Rob Caffey, director of K-State's office of mediated education and leader of the task force for the text-messaging system, said the system allows qualified users to register their cell phone numbers on the university's existing eProfile information system. The text messages will be sent by Leader Alert, a rapid-notification platform.

Caffey said it is crucial for students and faculty to sign up for the messages.

"We've done a lot of work to get the system in place," he said. "It is important people sign up because it is a voluntary system."

Caffey said the way the system works is when people sign up on <https://eid.k-state.edu> their phone numbers will be sent to a database with Leader Alert. After users register he said users will receive a text message to confirm the service. Then, if an emergency situation comes up, the police department or the university can evoke the system to send out a message automatically that will go to all the numbers in the database. He said it could take up to 30 minutes for the system to deliver all the messages.

Leader Alert handles a lot of university systems and the system can handle the entire number of students, faculty and staff at K-State, Caffey said.

"We hope people will opt in to this and we hope it is a valuable resource," he said.

There will be a test once a semester to make sure the system is working correctly, Caffey said. The first test will be Feb. 1.

Thomas Rawson, vice president for Administration and Finance at K-State, said after the Virginia Tech shooting last spring, K-State began to evaluate its emergency notification systems. He said last fall the university developed a task force to look into the option of such a notification system.

"We talked to other universities in Kansas and found out they were all in various stages," Rawson said.

A question of content

Hy-Vee proposes bill to increase alcohol level in legal sales

By Amanda Keim
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A bill requesting that grocery stores be allowed to sell wines, spirits and multitudes of other alcoholic items is working its way through the Kansas legislature right now.

The bill, proposed by Hy-Vee, would eliminate the current Kansas law that prohibits grocery stores from selling anything with greater than 3.2 percent alcohol content.

City Commissioner Bob Strawn said that removal of this law would alter the face of Kansas as a state.

"Kansas is a pretty conservative state. It wasn't long ago that you couldn't even drink in Kansas at all," said Strawn. "We are not moving as fast as other states around the country in terms of liquor sales. It's a reflection of who we are as Kansans."

This conservative "reflection" stands firm today as parts of Kansas do not sell liquor at all, and most do not allow liquor sales on Sundays. Not long ago, Kansas would not allow liquor at all and even passing planes would have to cease liquor sales over the state, Strawn said.

In other states, such as Missouri, Hy-Vee and other grocery chains are able to sell liquor products at will, according to the Hy-Vee Web site. Missouri has no percentage-based liquor differentiation system.

"There is an open space today, that if the legislation is approved, they [Hy-Vee] will build a liquor store there as an extension of the grocery store," Strawn said.

Though it is obvious that Hy-Vee will make use of this legislation, other large grocery chains in Manhattan must rely on corporate office decisions.

Though Walgreens sells liquor products in other parts of the country, it does not in Kansas and would continue to avoid selling liquor if the law were to change.

"I'm sure it's a corporate decision that they made," Cassidy O'Shea, Walgreens store manager, said. "We are a pharmacy, and we want to promote health. It's even hard to promote tobacco products, because we want to promote healthy living. There's probably tax issues. I'm sure there's a whole list of reasons why we wouldn't."

Though the law would prove beneficial to consumers who would only need to make one stop at the grocery store to purchase both food and liquor, the bill would crush Kansas liquor stores, Strawn said.

Jeff Filby, owner of Filby Liquor Store, said that this is not the first time his business has been threatened by large grocery chains.

"There is an association that a lot of us [independent liquor stores] belong to that has been fighting this for years, and I assume we'll be fighting it again," Filby said. "This isn't a new thing; it's been going on for years."

Filby compared the ability of chain stores to sell liquor to that of large grocery chains ruining the market for smaller, local grocery retailers.

"I'm dead set against it. There is no way that we [independent retailers] could compete with Hy-Vee and the other major chains with their purchasing power," Filby said.

"If the Hy-Vees and Wal-Marts and all them start selling wine and spirits and the strong beer, then the small liquor stores are out of business."

Strong resistance from independent liquor stores and conservatives has Strawn believing that this bill will not pass into Kansas law anytime soon.

"My guess is that it is unlikely that it will pass. It will have fierce resistance from the conservative legislature, and there will be fierce resistance from the existing liquor industry," Strawn said. "I would be surprised if we have liquor in grocery stores in the foreseeable future."

Local man injured outside Rusty's during alleged crime

By Salena Strate
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Manhattan man was injured during an alleged aggravated burglary and battery outside Rusty's Last Chance Bar and Grill on Wednesday, according to a Riley County Police report.

RCPD Lt. Kurt Moldrup said the 21-year-old man was having a drink on the patio of Rusty's (1211 Moro St.) when he exited the establishment. After leaving, three men allegedly asked him for money around 2 a.m. As he declined, one of the suspects hit the man and took his possessions. The suspects fled the scene. According to the police report, taken from the man was a black Boost mobile cell phone and $18.

Moldrup said the first suspect was described as a white man about 6 feet 2 inches tall and between the ages of 22 and 28. The suspect had a platinum grill on the top row of his teeth and was last seen wearing a black or navy do-rag and a red ball cap.

The second suspect was described as a black man about 6 feet 3 inches tall and between the ages of 25 and 33. The suspect was last seen wearing a black coat with a white liner.

The third suspect was described as a black man about 6 feet 1 inch tall.

The man was taken to Mercy Regional Health Center for pain, according to RCPD reports.

Now that he has one semester of college and a month of winter break, Aaron Lambert said he can't wait to get more involved in on-campus activities.

Lambert, freshman in pre-med and business administration, attended the Wildcat Winter Expo in the K-State Student Union courtyard Thursday night from 6 to 8. The event was hosted by the Union Program Council.

More than 140 student organizations set up display boards and activities in the K-State Student Union to promote the purpose of their organizations and let students know how they can get involved.

Lambert said some of the tables he stopped at were emPower cats, Native American Student Association, Black Student Union, Alpha Phi Alpha, Delta Lambda Phi and a new organization on campus called The Student Farm Club.

"I want to get a wide range of friends from different walks of life," Lambert said.

Susan Matzke, administrative assistant for Student Activities and Services, said it was a beneficial event for students.

STUDENT GOVERNMENT

Student Senate approves slight increase in student privilege fee

By Sasha Harden
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate approved an increase in the Student Activity Fee and the Office of Student Activities and Services Privilege Fee in last night's meeting. The vote to increase student fees passed with a 53-0-0 vote.

The student activity fee increase will be less than $1 per student.

Included in the list of passed bills was an increase in funds for Mortar Board Senior Honor Society, Black Student Union and Sensible Nutrition and Body Image Peer Educators (SNAC), which passed 49-0-0.

SNAC was looking for funds to bring in an educational speaker to address body image on campus.

"With a speaker like this, it's very instrumental that we have support," said Diana Schalles, Health Educator and registered nutritionist at Lafene Student Health Center.

The SGA agenda also included the introduction of two resolutions.

The first resolution was in support of a campus commitment to environmental sustainability. Several campus organizations attended the meeting in support of the resolution's passage. K-State received the third lowest score in the Big 12 conference for environmental sustainability, according to the resolution.

Members also voted on a second resolution to support the K-State PROUD Campaign.

The KSU Horse Judging Team and the K-State Crops Team each received commendations from the Student Senate for their achievements.

The meeting adjourned with a comment about the new K-State PROUD shirts from Gayle Spencer, Assistant Dean of Student Life Coordinator.

Kansas court upholds murder conviction against former K-State English professor

By Annette Lawless
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

TOPEKA — The Kansas Supreme Court has upheld the murder conviction of former K-State professor Thomas E. Murray.

Murray, 51, was convicted of first-degree murder in the 2003 death of his former wife, Carmin Ross, also a former K-State employee.

Though a Douglas County District Court jury found him guilty in March 2005, Murray has maintained he was innocent.

The state's case was considered circumstantial, but the district court noted in its ruling last Friday that it was not the court's place to reassess the credibility of the evidence presented in the trial, said Ron Keefover, Kansas Supreme Court Education Information Officer.

Murray's attorney said there was prosecutorial misconduct in closing arguments during the month-long trial, and that the judge should not have permitted hearsay statements to others by the victim and brief testimony by a detective concerning Murray's later decision to decline an additional interview.

The court, however, rejected the claim, determining there was not a sufficient reason to reverse the verdict.

Though Murray did not testify in his case, he did speak at his sentencing hearing, calling the case a "fairy tale" and that he would not accept responsibility for an act he did not commit.

Prosecutors, however, were suspicious of Murray because of his statements in a nine-and-a-half hour interview with detectives the night his ex-wife was killed. Murray didn't even ask about how Ross died until two-and-a-half hours into the interview.

"Although no one had informed the defendant how Carmin died, he told the police in his interview that he would not have done anything 'like they were suggesting' because he was a 'thinking man,'" said Justice Robert E. Davis, writing for a unanimous court. "He explained that if he were going to commit a homicide, he would do it with an airborne poison 'or something really sick.' He later stated that he was 'having fun with this from a CSI perspective.'"

Ross' body was found by sheriff's deputies who were asked to check on her by her fiancé, Larry Lima, who lived in California but was planning to move to Lawrence, according to police reports.

Ross, whose body was found on her living room floor, suffered 11 lacerations due to blunt force injury followed by 13 stabs to the neck with a knife, as well as defensive wounds on her arms, Keefover said. Police officers reported the murder was one of the most gruesome to take place in Douglas County.

Murray was found guilty of first-degree murder. He was sentenced to life in prison, with the possibility of parole in 25 years. He is completing his sentence at the El Dorado Correctional Facility.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Cries of injustice

Movies insensitively mock unplanned pregnancies

I must have missed the memo when unplanned pregnancy became funny. Sometimes real life just isn't as humorous as it would seem in the movies.

"Juno," a movie written by a clever ex-stripper and one of the biggest indie films to come along in a while, is about a 16-year-old getting pregnant by her best friend.

While it is charming, and the young love between Juno and her Paulie Bleeker seems very real, the entire event the plot is based on — a teenager getting pregnant — doesn't really amuse me.

Movies about unplanned pregnancies like "Juno" and "Knocked Up" are making something funny that isn't funny at all. According to the American Pregnancy Association, 468,988 babies are born to teenage mothers every year. Assuming the majority — if not all — of these are unplanned, this is not funny. This is a serious problem that shouldn't be taken lightly.

Even adults who have the resources to take care of an unplanned pregnancy and the subsequent child shouldn't have their situation treated humorously. The Centers for Disease Control & Prevention claimed that in 2001, about one-half of pregnancies in the United States were unintended.

With Plan B, the "morning-after pill," now available over the counter and contraceptives available almost anywhere (even in public bathrooms), it is easier than ever to prevent pregnancy.

When a woman becomes pregnant with a baby she isn't ready for, she could give the baby up for adoption, which is an increasing burden on the state.

The state must then take care of these children in group or foster homes until someone comes along to take them home.

Many children who go into foster care suffer sexual or physical abuse by their foster parents.

The Administration of Children and Families, a division of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, said in 2005 about 25 percent of children in foster homes were experiencing abuse. More than 62 percent of those cases were because of malnutrition and more than 9 percent were of a sexual nature.

Pregnancies don't always end happily. In the real world, the person who knocks you up might not be the guy you're meant to be with. He probably won't be as cute as Michael Cera or as sweet as Seth Rogen.

The father might be some other girl's husband or a guy who already has 10 kids. He probably doesn't love the mother and most likely won't be excited at the idea of having a baby to take care of, especially if both parents are still in high school.

If Americans think unplanned pregnancy is so hilarious, what else will suddenly become funny? Maybe drug addictions or domestic violence will be in the next big comedy blockbuster.

Pain, suffering, awkwardness and desperation are starting to define comedy.

Hollywood writers are chipping away trying to find humor out of anything they can to make more money from, and I believe unplanned pregnancy shouldn't be one of those things.

THE FOURUM

785-395-4444

The Campus Fourum is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourum is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

Hey, Fourum, stop printing stuff about the Stuni.

Michael Beasley should shoot with his right hand when he gets bored.

I take closure in knowing that Brett Favre would totally beat the crap out of Eli.

I believe my roommate has more North Face than a sorority girl.

It burns when I pee. What should I do?

Fourum, did you get your ears lowered?

Just to let everyone know, there is more than one person on the Kansas State University Horse Judging Team.

You know it's been a good night if you've drank way too much Crown Royal and eaten an entire box of Cheetos. Well, I guess they're Cheez-Its.

It shouldn't be called "Across the Universe." It should be called "Across the Stuni-verse."

To all of you student pedestrians out there that just step in front of moving vehicles, I hope when you get slammed by a car who's trying to drive carefully on campus that you don't sue anyone.

By the way, a moving vehicle is several tons. It takes a lot of energy to stop. It takes three watts for a student to stop walking for two seconds. Be green.

Jon Wright, that article was completely true. We do need to support Frank Martin more.

Who the hell made up Stuni?

I'm not going to class today because yesterday's Collegian said it was Friday.

Apparently there should be no school on the 25th, because it's officially a Saturday. Thanks, Collegian.

Racial remarks should not gain overage of media attention

Earlier this month at the Mercedes-Benz Championship, the season-opening event of the PGA Tour, one sportscaster made a comment that earned her a two-week suspension from her job.

During an on-air broadcast, in response to fellow Golf Channel anchor Nick Faldo's suggestion that in order to beat Tiger Woods on the golf course, young golfers "should just gang up [on Woods] for a while," his co-host Kelly Tilghman replied, "lynch him in a back alley."

Imagine for a moment that Tilghman's statement was completely innocent, only referring to the relative impossibility of beating Woods on the golf course. She simply meant to be complimentary of his superior game. Her comments weren't racist, and she doesn't see color at all. Lynching is a word unrelated to race that simply denotes "ganging up" on an opponent to ensure victory. It could be true, but so could the opposite — she could be a card-carrying Klan member — and it wouldn't matter.

What should break the heart of the burgeoning social activist is these issues get any attention at all. While coverage of these remarks is limited to the sports world — perhaps the noose on the cover of Golfweek magazine was a bit much — we are not so far removed from the media circus that surrounded Don Imus and Dog the Bounty Hunter. Black U.S. leaders spoke out and marched, and according to Golf.com, Al Sharpton was on TV the next morning demanding Ms. Tilghman be fired.

Don Imus was fired and subsequently rehired after a whirlwind mea culpa tour. Dog the Bounty Hunter was lambasted in the media, which led to a tearful apology on Larry King Live complete with the earth-shattering realization that he was, in fact, not black.

Even dialogue about race in the 2008 presidential election focuses on candidates' comments and not their legislative history in dealing with the real-world concerns of America's community of color.

It's sad the entirety of the modern-day civil-rights movement gets geared up to challenge marginal media figures and their racist remarks, which have left perhaps tens of minorities debilitated and scarred beyond repair.

It's sad they utterly ignore the fact that, according to the 2006 edition of "The Covenant with Black America," 30 percent of black U.S. urban families live below the poverty line, more than 10 percent of black people are unemployed and 32 percent of black U.S. citizens have a zero or negative net worth. Black people make up 44 percent of the nation's prison population but only 12 percent of the country's population.

Forgive me if I'm not up in arms when a newscaster has a bad day, or an old southern shock-jock calls someone a name. The problems facing the U.S. black community are far more complex and far-reaching than any comments made on the fringes of the entertainment world.

During this time of choosing our new leaders, we should not be distracted by the flitting aftershocks of racism but instead analyze and deal with the real-world issues facing America's minority population.

TO THE POINT

Potential placement of Hy-Vee not best location for expansion

Manhattan looks a lot different today than it did, say, four years ago.

Many businesses have staked a claim in Manhattan, and for the most part, residents have approved. But as national chains have moved to Manhattan, the city has,

in some cases, gotten a bad deal.

The area around the intersection of Fort Riley Boulevard and Bluemont Avenue has been the focus of much of the development in the city. When incoming freshmen arrived in Manhattan in fall 2004, there was no IHOP or Best Buy, and these businesses have now been welcomed by most residents.

The area is now also a possible location for a Hy-Vee grocery store. We are glad that Manhattan is bringing in businesses and jobs, but if a Hy-Vee is built near Bluemont Avenue, it will be the fourth large grocery store in a small area, along with Wal-Mart, Dillon's and Walgreens. Perhaps a better place would be closer to campus or to other residential areas.

Many parts of Manhattan would welcome a business like Hy-Vee, but for some reason, businesses seem to set up shop soon after they exit Coach Bill Snyder Highway.

There is nothing wrong with national chains, but if Manhattan starts to lose its locally owned businesses, like Bob's Diner, the city could lose its college-town feel as well. Manhattan should encourage local businesses to open and expand, and bigger chains. The city should strive to offer an environment that is friendly to both locally and non-locally owned establishments.

We are glad Manhattan is growing, but it should grow for the needs of Manhattan residents, not just for the wants of big chain businesses.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

WHO HAS YOUR VOTE

Women voters strive to educate themselves on more than gender

This will be the second article in a five-week series examining the voting behavior of different groups within society and their effects on the 2008 presidential election. In the next few weeks, the Collegian will examine the electoral effects of the black, military and religious communities nationally and locally, in that order.

By Willow Williamson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The gender issues of the 2008 presidential election are making everyone walk on tippy-toes. Does Hillary Clinton, D-N.Y., have the women's vote, and what are women interested in for the upcoming election?

In the 2004 presidential election, women comprised 60.1 percent of the vote, which amounted to about 8.8 million more women voters than men, according to the Web site for the Center for American Women and Politics at Rutgers University.

The gap between men and women in this election was greater than any other year. In the 2000 election, though the number of female votes still beat the number of male votes, it was by only 3.4 million votes.

Considering the makeup of the candidates for this year's presidential election, it would seem Clinton, who could become the first woman president in history, could easily gain the majority of the women voters, however, at least on the K-State campus, Clinton will need to rely on more than just her gender to get her into the Oval Office.

Many female K-State students and faculty are focusing on current issues instead of gender, race and party affiliation.

"I think people should vote for candidates based on their issues and certainly not based on their gender," said Angela Hubler, director of women's studies.

She said her students have said many different issues are important for a candidate, including social security, alternative energy sources, education, expanding medical insurance to low income children, paid parental leave, withdrawing troops

WOMEN'S VOTING FACTS

Women vote in higher numbers than men, and have done so in every election since 1964. In 2000, 7.8 million more women voted than men did.

Women have voted at higher rates than men since 1980. In 2000, 56.2% of registered women voters went to the polls, compared to 53.1% of male voters.

More women register to vote than men. Some 68.7 million women were registered to vote in 2000 compared to 59.4 million men. Initial reports show the trend will continue in 2004.

Women are late deciders, and make up a higher number of undecided and swing voters than men. Women are 60% of undecided likely voters in the latest Battleground Tracking Poll conducted by Lake Snell Perry & Associates and the Tarrance Group (Oct. 18-21).

— Rutgers University Web site from Iraq, gay rights and abortion laws.

"Women are concerned about everything," Hubler said. "Women are not concerned with only gender-specific issues."

Lydia Peele, student body vice president and senior in math education, said she has not yet chosen a favorite candidate, but she will focus on issues like the environment, health care, the war, the economy and education when making her decision.

"I won't vote Republican or Democrat because they are Republican or Democrat," Peele said. "I will be looking at issues and voting that way."

She said students should be looking for positive solutions to problems in the U.S. and not focusing on what gender, race or party affiliation the candidates with whom they align themselves.

"Something I would like to do is lead by example and help students find the resources to get the information," Peele said.

Kimberly Agwu, secretary for the Black Student Union and junior in pre-nursing, also said it is important for women to keep up to date on the election.

"[Students should] research and educate themselves for what is important to them and look toward the future," Agwu said.

She said some of the most important issues for her are health care, Social Security and the economy. She said Clinton and Barack Obama, D-Ill., best represent what she is looking for in a candidate.

"They both speak for the minority, [Obama] being an African-American and [Clinton] being a woman," she said.

One of the most important issues for many women on campus focuses on the Iraq war.

Agwu said she hopes the next president will help bring the U.S. troops out of Iraq, which in turn, she said could save the U.S. money, which could be used for other important issues like health care.

Lindsey Kelley, sophomore in pre-professional health education, also said the Iraq war is an important issue, which will affect how she votes.

Kelley said she thinks the U.S. never should have gone to Iraq in the first place and the troops should be brought home, however, now that troops are there, she said the U.S. can not leave too early.

"We've opened a can of worms," she said. "We need to stay and take care of the people there."

Kelley said the candidates should focus more on issues instead of degrading each other and fighting all of the time.

She said they should work together and go across party lines.

As an independent, she said she would like to see an increase in the importance of third parties.

Overall, Kelley said the most important thing for women is to stay educated.

"Do some research," she said. "Know who you're voting for and vote. That's the biggest cliché ever, but you have a voice. Use it."

City street closure hinders busing, relocates school drop-off point

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new city water-line project has put a damper on one Manhattan school — and might be putting some children in danger.

Two-block road closings in front of Eugene Field Head Start Building, located at 1700 Leavenworth St., have restricted drop-off points for the school.

The road is closed on Leavenworth between 17th and Delaware streets, said school officials.

On the first day of the road closures, parents and school buses were asked to relocate their drop-off-points to a block away, walking the 3- and 4-year-old children across the 17th Street intersection, said Sally Frick, school director.

"It's pretty much been complete chaos," Frick said. "It can be very dangerous."

Frick said the reconstruction hit the school by surprise, but the staff has tried to adapt as best as possible.

Because of the change, Frick said her staff now walks the children to and from school buses, even serving as crossing guards on the narrow street.

"This closure has created a very challenging situation for the children and families who attend school at the Eugene Field Head Start Building," said Michele Jones, communication coordinator for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383.

Though the street closure might be considered a nuisance for some, Jones said the city has worked with the school to allow parking along nearby blocks that otherwise have restricted parking.

School officials said they are unsure how long the road closure will last, but until then, they will work with the city to keep students safe. District officials said they ask people to drive with caution near the school construction.

The city of Manhattan was not available for comment.

ISU brings freshman-led crew to Bramlage to face young Wildcat basketball team

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The last time K-State opened conference play with a 3-0 record, several of the current Wildcats were not even born.

K-State (13-4, 3-0 Big 12 Conference) achieved that mark during the 1987-88 season, a year that ended in the Midwest Regional and Elite Eight of the NCAA Tournament.

With a team made up of several freshmen, the Wildcats are reaching several marks which have not been reached during their lifetimes.

Even the players who were alive during the '87-88 season were all very young.

The Wildcats' current attitude? They aren't going to let up on breaking school records or be afraid to set their own. Freshman guard Jacob Pullen said the recent success is a reflection of the effort K-State has been displaying on the court.

"We are working hard and that's what we try to do when we come in [Bramlage], we try to always prepare ourselves to get better," Pullen said. "We want to keep breaking records for K-State and we want to do things K-State hasn't done in a while."

Pullen also attributed the achievements to recent maturity as a team, especially after the Wildcats lost 103-77 to Xavier Dec. 31, a game he called a wake-up call.

"We had just beat a few teams and it was a wake-up call, losing by 20 points," he said. "[Beasley] didn't have a good game and it made us realize what we had to do to be a good team."

K-State isn't resting on its 3-0 Big 12 record, though the inclination to do so might be strong. Freshman forward Bill Walker pointed out the conference title is the overall goal.

"It's nice to be 3-0, but the big picture is the Big 12 and we're going to have to be a good team to do that," Walker said.

The next chance to continue the Big 12 winning streak comes Saturday with a 7 p.m. game against Iowa State at Bramlage Coliseum. Iowa State (12-7, 2-2 Big 12) is coming off an 83-59 loss to Kansas in Lawrence and has won nine of its last 12 games.

The Cyclones have lost their last six games in Bramlage.

"They're not a bad team; they gave Kansas a good run for a while," Pullen said. "We are just trying to focus on pressuring the ball, so they don't play a lot to the guards and try to make [their guards] work to handle the ball."

The Cyclones are led by freshman forward Wesley Johnson, who is scoring 19 points per game in the Big 12. Iowa State is also getting production from freshman forward Craig Brackins, who is putting up 18.8 points per conference game.

Wildcats flip switch, find some balance

Airing this week on the K-State men's basketball "Variety Hour," freshman forward and comedian Michael Beasley, freshman guard and tight rope acrobat Jacob Pullen, "Interviews with the Stars" by junior forward Andre "Gumble" Gilbert, and, as always, your K-State Pep Band, under the direction of freshman forward Bill Walker.

Welcome, ladies and gentlemen, to the show that is K-State men's basketball. Yes, this year's group of Wildcats has displayed many personalities while modeling an assortment of hats off the court, but a single cohesive unit is beginning to emerge on the court.

This group of freshmen, combined with some salty upperclassmen, is starting to turn the corner in the early Big 12 Conference season. The defense that was once non-existent (for example, Xavier on Dec. 31) is becoming one of the best in the conference. The Wildcats held Colorado to 56 points in Boulder, Colo., limited Texas A&M to five field goals in the second half last Saturday and forced Oklahoma to commit 16 turnovers in the conference opener.

It is almost as if this K-State team has the treasured ability to "flip the switch." When it comes time to step onto the court, the Wildcats treat the game with the mentality that it is indeed business time. It is a trait that is coveted by the best of college and NBA teams — having the ability to stay grounded with the street clothes on, then become different animals when the Jordans are laced up.

Some fans might have seen the Internet videos or press conference interview clips that display this bunch of Wildcats as jokesters, pranksters and just a group of guys who like having fun, which technically, they are. Sure, it is much easier to have fun when you are winning on the court, but the right mix of child-like behavior and professionalism is what this basketball team needs at this juncture of the season. So far that philosophy seems to be working for the 13-4 Wildcats.

Wednesday's game at Colorado was just a good indication of how much this team cares about winning, despite its obvious split-personality disorder. If you couldn't see the angst that Walker constantly displayed, or the frustration that Beasley took out on the rim after a break-away steal, then you certainly are not viewing this team as you should be.

On the hardwood the past three weeks, K-State has been playing as hard, or harder, than any other team in the country. The defense is making fantastic strides, and we will see how far it has come, as it takes on the most prolific offense in the nation when Kansas comes to town next Wednesday.

We have a fun-loving, hard-working basketball team in Manhattan right now, and hopefully the fans can return the favor. There are only seven more home games left in this 2007-08 basketball season. Only seven more times to watch Bill and Mike dunk in person; only seven more times to see Clint Stewart mock the old Michael Jordan and Larry Bird McDonald's commercials (see the behind-the-head three-point shot); and only seven more times as students and fans to verbally beat down opposing teams.

It all starts tomorrow against Iowa State, so get ready. Bring your paper, your voice, wear your purple and sport that young and crazy attitude. The team will be displaying all of those things, so why not do the same?

Wildcat women's basketball team attempts 1st 6-0 start in 7 years

By Mike Devader
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's basketball team will put its eight-game winning streak on the line when it travels to Stillwater, Okla., to play No. 13 Oklahoma State at 1:30 p.m. on Sunday.

The Wildcats have a chance to start Big 12 Conference action 6-0, but they will also have to defy history to get the job done.

Since the 2001 season, K-State has started conference play 5-0 twice, but road games immediately following both five-game winning streaks ended in defeat. In 2001, the team's first conference loss came in a game at Oklahoma State.

The Cowgirls come into this matchup 4-1 in conference play, with their only blemish coming in an upset loss Wednesday to the Texas Longhorns, 70-63. Texas beating Oklahoma State might come as a surprise to some people, but K-State coach Deb Patterson said nothing shocks her when it comes to competition in the Big 12.

"This is an unbelievably tough, competitive league," Patterson said. "Teams are going to finish this league with losses you don't see in the other power conferences."

Oklahoma State was on an eight-game winning streak before its loss to the Longhorns, and coincidentally, the Wildcats have won eight straight games as they prepare for Sunday's game. Even after losing their last game, Patterson said she is amazed by the way the Cowgirls are playing basketball right now.

"The OSU team is playing extraordinary, they are very confident," Patterson said. "The challenge is going to be extraordinary."

One of those challenges the Wildcats will face is Oklahoma State freshman point guard Andrea Riley, who had 15 points and five assists in the losing effort against Texas. Junior point guard Shalee Lehning, who will be matching up against Riley, said it is too early in the year to get caught up in which teams are winning and losing.

"We can't get worried about what is going on; we just have to remain focused on what we are doing," Lehning said. "It's still a battle; it's Big 12 basketball every night."

To some, accumulating a good record in conference play might be important, but Patterson and the Wildcats said that to be successful on the road at Oklahoma State, thoughts about starting 6-0 in the Big 12 are irrelevant.

"We need to work pass-by-pass, game-by-game," Patterson said. "Every night out is a war, and no one is guaranteed a victory."

KSU to be on ESPN

K-State men's basketball will now be going out to an even larger audience.

The three remaining games that were slated to be on FSN-Midwest, Saturday's game against Iowa State, Feb. 6 against Nebraska and Feb. 23 against Baylor, will be available as part of ESPN's Full Court package. They were moved to allow more fans to see the key Big 12 matchups. Since FSN's viewing area is restricted to homes in Kansas and the Kansas City area, this will allow other areas to see Wildcat basketball.

K-State track squad to team up with Big 12 competitors Saturday

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The track and field team will meet with two of its usual competitors to represent the Big 12 Conference in the Conference Challenge this Saturday in Lincoln, Neb.

K-State will combine with Nebraska and Missouri to take on Colorado State, Brigham Young and Air Force, the representatives from the Mountain West Conference.

K-State coach Cliff Rovelto said the three Big 12 teams have the right tools to be successful in the meet that pits the two conferences against each other.

"These three schools are schools that are relatively complete," Rovelto said. "We've been a complete team traditionally. Nebraska's been a historically complete team. Missouri has good quality throwers and good distance runners."

The Wildcats are entering the meet after a strong showing at last week's Wildcat Invitational. Juniors Loren Groves and Scott Sellers were named Big 12 Athletes of the Week following the invitational. Groves broke a K-State women's record in the weight throw with a throw of 69-11.50. The toss earned her an NCAA automatic bid. Sellers also earned an automatic bid when he cleared a height of 7-4.50 in the high jump.

The Conference Challenge will be scored as a dual meet. Each team will be able to enter two athletes in an event, and the two top performers from each conference will be scored. Rovelto said he does not mind the different format for the meet.

"Having some scored meets is nice," Rovelto said. "In our sport, we do not have many of them anymore. In our sport, they've gone away from that. Most meets now are more like time trials where everyone can just run fast."

Rovelto said meets like the Conference Challenge are important for the team, because they provide good practice competing at a scored meet before the team competes in the Big 12 and NCAA Championships.

"We always try to work in three or four scored meets in the indoor and outdoor season," Rovelto said.

In a meet where schools are grouped together on one team, coaches can use their athletes in a way that does not put as much strain on them.

"In this case where it's three schools from one conference competing together, you're not forced to have all your athletes in their best event," Rovelto said. "It's more forgiving. You don't have to double up as many kids."

Despite the fact that the teams often compete against each other, Rovelto said it will not be awkward teaming up with Missouri and Nebraska. Because of how often K-State competes with these teams, many of the athletes on each team know each other and are relatively close.

Joining up with other teams is not new to the Wildcats either. Last year, the team competed in the Jim Click Shootout in Tucson, Ariz. The Wildcats paired up with Texas Tech to represent the Big 12 against the Pacific-10 Conference and the Southeastern Conference. The Big 12 representatives finished third in the competition.

Two Manhattan veterinary hospitals differ in boarding, grooming services

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Decisions, decisions. Two veterinary hospitals operate in Manhattan and pet owners routinely make choices about which one better suits their needs.

The K-State Veterinary Medical Teaching Hospital offers services like vaccinations, overall wellness exams, dental care, flea and tick prevention and minor surgery.

"Our job is to find [the problem] and give them advice," said Susan Nelson, assistant professor of clinical sciences. "We make recommendations based on life-styles and tailor [our services] to individuals."

VMTH offers special service packages for kittens, puppies, and senior pets. The puppy and kitten packages include all the core vaccinations, four wellness exams, two fecal exams for intestinal parasites, spaying and neutering, microchip implantation, flea and tick treatment, de-worming and nail trim for each visit for one year, according to the VMTH Web site, www.vet.k-state.edu/depts/VMTH/index.htm.

VMTH performs minor surgeries such as minor wound repair and lump removal. It also provides health certificates for owners who travel nationally and internationally.

VMTH is open Monday through Friday. It also is open on some Saturdays by appointment only for vaccinations.

Little Apple Veterinary Hospital is a full-service hospital and provides medications, surgical procedures, dental care and vaccines. Where this vet hospital differs from VMTH is it offers boarding and grooming services as well.

"Everything can be done while [the pet] is there," said Tom Lindquist, owner of Little Apple Veterinary Hospital.

The grooming services include bathing, brushing, treating cuts, shaves, matted hair removal and nail painting.

Pet boarding can be for one day or up to several weeks. Little Apple treats pets to outdoor walks in an enclosed wooded area three times a day.

Clients also can purchase one-on-one play time for their pet during their pet's stay. Play times and types of play are up to the owner. Some types of play include fetch, tug-of-war and sitting in an attendant's lap. Grooming and boarding prices for dogs are based on the weight and breed of the dog, while cat owners pay a flat rate.

Catering to its clients, Little Apple has installed separate quarters for cats boarding away from dogs. They also provide front desk kennels for quick drop-off and pick-up.

"If you have to leave [a pet] somewhere, it is best to have a professional taking care of them," said Derek Brake, graduate student in ruminant nutrition and client of Little Apple Hospital. "They're close and convenient."

BLAST COULD SIGNAL AL-QAIDA ROLE IN MOSUL

BAGHDAD — The abandoned apartment block known as the Pepsi building vanished in seconds, leaving a 30-foot-deep blast crater and a ring of destruction for a quarter mile in every direction through a shanty district in Mosul.

Then on Thursday — even before the final death count was tallied — came more bloodshed: A suicide bomber killed a police chief and two other officers as they toured the devastation from the previous day. Residents with insurgent sympathies taunted the chief moments before the attack.

Two deadly days have underscored what some U.S. military commanders fear is ahead for the northern city: that al-Qaida in Iraq could be prepared to use all means of chaos and violence to defend its last urban redoubt.

The stakes are high on both sides.

Al-Qaida and its supporters would find themselves without a major base of operations if ousted from Iraq's third-largest city, which occupies transport crossroads between Baghdad, Syria and other points.

SHOOTINGS IGNITE RACIAL TENSIONS

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — Protesters tried to force their way into the court hearing Thursday of a white teenager charged with a shooting rampage in a black settlement that left four people dead, including a mother and her infant.

The bloodshed on Jan. 14 in the Skielik settlement, 100 miles northwest of Johannesburg, has ignited racial tensions that remain close to the surface more than a decade after the end of South Africa's apartheid system.

Riot police were called in to control the dozens of black protesters who gathered outside the Swarttruggens District Court, trying to push through the compound gates as 18-year-old Johan Nel made a brief appearance inside. He faces charges of murder and attempted murder.

The crowd waved signs saying "no bail, let him rot in jail," the South African Press Association reported. Police pushed the group was pushed to the side of the street.

Police are unclear on a motive, but Skielik's residents allege that Nel killed out of racial hatred.

BRAZIL TO COMBAT DEFORESTATION

BRASILIA, Brazil — Brazil will combat rising deforestation in the Amazon by sending extra federal police and environmental agents to areas where illegal clearing of the rain forest jumped dramatically last year, officials said Thursday.

Authorities will monitor the areas in an attempt to prevent anyone from trying to plant crops or raise cattle there, Environment Minister Marina Silva said.

The new measures were announced after President Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva called an emergency meeting of Cabinet ministers because new data showed an apparent reversal of a three-year slowdown in the Amazon deforestation rate.

The clearing of Brazil's Amazon rain forest jumped in the final months of 2007, spurred by high prices for corn, soy and cattle.

Agriculture Minister Reinhold Stephanes said Latin America's largest nation has plenty of available land for farming and cattle that has already been deforested. Environmentalists fear sugarcane, used here to produce ethanol, could spread through the rain forest, but most ethanol operations are in southern Brazil far from the Amazon.

U.N. POWERS AGREE ON MORE IRAN SANCTIONS

UNITED NATIONS — Major U.N. Security Council powers have agreed on an incremental increase in sanctions on Iran, including a new restriction on exporters doing business with the country, diplomats said Thursday.

A draft resolution also calls for more monitoring of Iran's military and financial institutions, broader travel bans on Iranian nuclear scientists and other key officials, and freezing the assets of people and banks linked to weapons proliferation, Security Council diplomats told The Associated Press.

Diplomats from the five nations with veto power on the council — the U.S., Russia, China, Britain and France — spent a third day negotiating a final agreement on principles that would form the basis for a third round of U.N. sanctions on Iran. They were joined by Germany, which has long been involved in efforts to resolve the Iran nuclear dispute.

Democrat Dennis Kucinich is abandoning bid for White House

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND — Democrat Dennis Kucinich is abandoning his second, long-shot bid for the White House as he faces a tough fight to hold onto his other job — U.S. congressman.

In an interview with Cleveland's Plain Dealer, the six-term House member said he was quitting the race and would make a formal announcement on Friday.

"I will be announcing that I'm transitioning out of the presidential campaign," Kucinich said. "I'm making that announcement tomorrow about a new direction."

Kucinich has received little support in his presidential bid; he got 1 percent of the vote in the New Hampshire primary and was shut out in the Iowa caucuses. He did have a devoted following.

Kucinich, 61, is facing four challengers in the Democratic congressional primary March 4, and earlier this week he made an urgent appeal on his Web site for funds for his re-election. Rival Joe Cimperman has been critical of Kucinich for focusing too much time outside of his district while campaigning for president.

Kucinich brought the same sense of idealism to his second run for president as he did in his first bid. He said he was entering the race again because the Democratic Party wasn't pushing hard enough to end the Iraq war.

Once dubbed the "boy mayor" of Cleveland, he made an unpopular decision to refuse to sell a publicly owned utility that pushed the city into default and drove him from office.

After the city's financial troubles, the mayor faced death threats, and was forced to wear a bulletproof vest when he threw out the first ball at a Cleveland Indians game.

He barely survived a recall vote.

But he lost his bid for re-election as mayor of Cleveland in 1978 to Republican George Voinovich, who went on to become governor and then U.S. senator. His life and his political career were derailed. Kucinich spent more than a decade trying to get back into politics — traveling around the country and then working as a teacher, consultant and television news reporter.

During his time in Congress, Kucinich has been one of the most outspoken liberals, opposing international trade agreements like the North America Free Trade Agreement and marching with protesters in Seattle during a meeting of the World Trade Organization.

City manager of Greensburg to have seat of honor at State of the Union address

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Kansas will spend even more time in the national spotlight during the president's State of the Union address on Monday.

Steve Hewitt, the city manager of Greensburg, Kan., has been invited to sit with first lady Laura Bush during the annual speech.

President Bush is expected to single out Hewitt and praise his environmentally friendly rebuilding efforts in the tornado-devastated city.

"It's an incredibly exciting opportunity for him and for our town to be in the spotlight again, not for the tornado, but for what we're doing after with rebuilding," said Hewitt's assistant, Stacy Barnes.

The prime time billing for the small western Kansas town follows word last week that Gov. Kathleen Sebelius was chosen to deliver the Democratic response to Bush's address from Cedar Crest, the governor's residence in west Topeka.

Greensburg has won national attention since officials voted last month to rebuild the town's city buildings using the highest national environmental standards for construction. It is believed to be the first town in the country to set that goal.

The buildings will use recycled building materials, alternative energy sources and fixtures to conserve water. While they cost more to construct, the buildings generally are cheaper to operate and maintain.

Barnes said Hewitt was "shocked" last week when he received a series of phone calls from the White House inviting him to attend the speech. He is planning to go with his wife. In past years, about two dozen guests have been invited to sit in the first lady's box above the House chamber.

While Hewitt is in Washington, Barnes said he plans to meet with Kansas' congressional delegation and thank them for their help getting federal disaster aid for Greensburg. He and his wife also are scheduled to see the White House and other prominent sights in the nation's Capitol.

Federal tax deal to provide faster rebates in hopes extra spending will revive economy

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — With unprecedented speed and cooperation, Congress and the White House forged a deal Thursday to begin rushing tax rebates of $600 to $1,200 to most tax filers by spring, hoping they will spend the money just as quickly and jolt the ailing economy to life.

Rebates would be even higher for families with children.

The one-time tax rebates are at the center of a hard-won agreement to pump about $150 billion into the economy this year and perhaps stave off the first recession since 2001.

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, Republican leader John Boehner and Treasury Secretary Henry Paulson worked out the details in negotiations that stretched into Wednesday night at the Capitol.

About two-thirds of the tax relief would go out in rebate checks to 117 million families beginning in May. Businesses would get $50 billion in incentives to invest in new plants and equipment.

Individual taxpayers would get up to $600 in rebates, working couples $1,200 and those with children an additional $300 per child under the agreement.

In a key concession to Democrats, 35 million families who make at least $3,000 but don't pay taxes would get $300 rebates.

The rebates would phase out gradually for individuals whose adjusted gross income exceeds $75,000 and for couples with incomes above $150,000. Contributions to IRA and 401(k) retirement accounts and health savings accounts would not count toward the income limit.

"This package will lead to higher consumer spending and increased business investment," Bush said in hailing the agreement.

The bill will go straight to the House floor next week and on to the Senate, where some Democrats hope to add elements such as extending unemployment benefits for workers whose benefits have run out.

Indeed, many Democrats, such as Ways and Means Committee Chairman Charles Rangel, D-N.Y., and Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts, the liberal lion of the Senate, were deeply unhappy that Pelosi agreed to jettison that proposal in late-stage talks, as well as plans to increase food stamp payments.

"I do not understand, and cannot accept, the resistance of President Bush and Republican leaders to including an extension of unemployment benefits for those who are without work through no fault of their own," Rangel said.

The administration signaled it's unlikely to welcome efforts to broaden the measure, and pressure was mounting in the Senate to accept the hard-won deal.

"The American people are not going to have a lot of patience for taking time," Paulson said.

If the Senate gives quick approval, the first rebate payments could begin going out in May and most people could have them by July, he said.

It has become increasingly clear that the economy is teetering on the edge of recession, if it hasn't already gone over that line.

The crisis in subprime home loans has hit hard at many lending institutions, cramping credit for almost everyone else.

Economic growth has all but disappeared, companies are reporting big losses and Wall Street had been tumbling day after day — even after emergency Federal Reserve rate-cutting — until Wednesday's hopeful talk about the stimulus deal.

The Dow Jones industrial average was up more than 100 points Thursday after soaring nearly 300 the day before.

In addition to concerns openly expressed by lawmakers, members of Congress are not eager to run for reelection this fall with voters fearful of losing jobs in a recession.

For businesses, the stimulus measure would allow them to immediately tax write-offs for 50 percent of the purchase price of plants and other capital equipment and permit small businesses to write off additional purchases of equipment.

A provision to allow businesses suffering losses now to reclaim taxes previously paid was dropped in end-stage talks.

JUST A NOTE

Music class benefits young students

Shiny brass and wood instruments stood on display. Their extrinsic keys and mouthpieces waited for eager 10- and 11-year-olds to hold them and breathe life into them.

The first notes sounded atrocious and piercing. But these students and their teachers paid little attention. They came to make music.

Fifth grade often is a baffling time in children's lives because band class starts and the chance to learn an instrument eels just like the first time they picked up a basketball.

During the last decade, music programs in public schools have declined. The Music for All Foundation produced "The Sound of Silence - The Unprecedented Decline in Music Education in California Public Schools" with data from the California Department of Education. The study, released in September 2004, revealed that 50 percent fewer students enrolled in music programs in 2003-04 than in 1999-2000.

New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg announced in summer 2007 that New York City schools would be required to teach the arts, which includes music, according to a Dec. 25, 2007, article in the New York Times. To put some teeth in the initiative, Bloomberg said principals would be rated annually on their successes with teaching the arts, just as they are with other academic subjects.

Music means more than just another required subject for students. For some, it's a golden opportunity and a lifeline. Not every child is a young Einstein in math and science or a star on the soccer field. But music - a universal language - lives in some children and waits for that moment, late in elementary school, when they can choose their sound.

Research in recent decades has shown that music studies can help improve IQ and SAT scores. With standardized testing aside, making music is about basic human wants and desires; music tells stories that we often cannot tell one another in words.

"The arts are basic. Music should be an essential subject of every person's life," Paul Stewart said in "The True Intrinsic Value of Music Study," an article in the April-May 2007 "American Music Teacher."

"The basic, intrinsic value of music study comes shining through during every ensemble rehearsal, every group lesson, every private music lesson, every practice session and in every performance venue throughout the world."

Many of us probably do not play the instruments we played during our elementary years. Instruments, sheet music and music stands sitting at the back of our closets should be donated to schools so another child can have the opportunity we once anticipated.

Organizations like VH1's Save the Music Foundation also are dedicated to serve elementary-school children of all backgrounds and abilities. Since its start in 1997, Save the Music has donated about $40 million worth of musical instruments to 1,500 public schools and improved the lives of more than 1 million children.

The game shot or prize-winning science fair project for some students happens the first time they put on a crisp white shirt and black pants. They sit up straight, take a breath, look up to their conductors and blow out a note in unison with their peers.

Tattoos revolve around personal significance for local students, residents

By Hannah Blick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Her forearms are riddled with the marked scars of a past addiction. But on her right wrist, a different kind of permanent mark catches your eye. It's a tattoo.

Shannon "Ducky" Becker said she started getting tattoos after she had struggled with cutting - a form of self-mutilation - and finds it to be a therapeutic form of expression.

"They're much better than the ugly scars. I get to express myself in a personal and beautiful way," she said.

Becker, Fort Riley resident, said she now has 14 tattoos, including her newest, which she had done Wednesday. Her new tattoo forms a ring on her upper right leg with her four sons' names and their kanji characters - Chinese symbols that represent different animals, Becker said. She said she chose to include the kanji characters because they describe the animal-like qualities of her sons.

"I think all people act like animals," she said. "And I have four boys, and I'm the only female around - means I get to see that a lot."

Becker said the rest of her tattoos have personal meaning to her in different ways.

"This [tattoo] says 'In Vino Veritas,' which means 'truth in wine,'" she said, pointing to a large heart intertwined with thorny vines on her upper-left shoulder. "In other words, you do things when you're drunk that you wouldn't normally do sober.

"Most of my bad experiences had involved men and alcohol. Maybe that's why I don't drink anymore."

Though Becker's tattoos have meaning for her, not all people's tattoos are as sentimental. Jason England, a tattoo artist at Twisted Apple Tattoo in Aggieville (formerly Fine Line Tattoo) said just because a tattoo does not have deep meaning behind it, does not mean it's not worthwhile.

"As long as you don't ever get tired of looking at it and it's aesthetically pleasing to you, then you don't need to worry about the meaning," he said. "A tattoo doesn't always have to have deep, profound meaning."

OTHER SIDE OF THE NEEDLE

Chris Tassin, the new owner of Twisted Apple Tattoo, said she has been tattooing for almost 13 years and has seen a wide-range of tattoo requests, from those with deep, sentimental value to some that are more spur of the moment.

"You'd be surprised how many people walk in the door and say 'What's the cheapest tattoo you've got?' That's not the best idea," she said. "Then, when we try to talk them into putting more thought into it, they get mad at us. People think it's a fad - it's not."

Tassin said Twisted Apple's policy is they will not tattoo minors because too many people who get tattoos at a young age regret their decision later.

"It will affect your job opportunities - a lot of girls worry about if it'll show in their wedding dress," she said. "It's stuff like that you have to consider."

As she concentrated on outlining a tattoo on a customer, she also said she enjoys hearing her clients' stories and the meaning behind their tattoos, though some people take it a little too far.

"We hear lots of sob stories in here," Tassin said. "Sometimes I don't mind it, but sometimes it's a little more than we need to know."

England joked across the room with her, saying: "They think we're psychiatrists."

THINKING IT THROUGH

Jamie Macke said she has never regretted getting her tattoos.

Macke, senior in English literature, said she got her first tattoo when she was 18. She said her dad told her that tattoos on a woman's shoulders were unattractive - so that's exactly where she put one.

'CLOVERFIELD' AN EXCITING ADDITION TO HORROR GENRE, THOUGH ENDS UNRESOLVED

"Cloverfield"

Review by Brendan Praeger

"Cloverfield," one of the first big releases of 2008, is an excellent example of a film excelling within its genre.

The film is presented as a home video recovered by the government in the area formerly known as Central Park. It follows a group of friends attempting to survive after a large creature lays siege to New York City.

Most critics have described it as a mix of "Godzilla" and "The Blair Witch Project," and it succeeds by landing somewhere in between. The production values are high-quality, though the $25 million budget lands well below most monster movies.

The handheld cinematography works well for the most part, but the shaky camera work will get annoying for anyone with motion sickness.

Unlike "Godzilla," "Cloverfield" focuses on its characters rather than relying on special effects to keep the audience entertained.

By keeping the story simple and the pacing fast, director Matt Reeves keeps the audience's attention throughout the brisk 85-minute movie.

The film will disappoint some horror fans with its lack of exposition. We never find out what the monster is or where it came from, though a quick online search will provide several interesting theories.

As a horror movie, "Cloverfield" is as well-executed and fun to watch as anything else in the genre.

It might disappoint horror fans looking for an epic monster story, but everyone else should be entertained.

MOVIE REVIEWS

HEIGL, MARSDEN PROVIDE ON-SCREEN CHARM, CLICHÉ HUMOR IN WEDDING FILM '27 DRESSES'

"27 Dresses"

Review by Megan Moser

Devotees of wedding comedies will love the newest addition to the genre, but others might be less enthused.

The addition, "27 Dresses," takes its inspiration from the adage "always a bridesmaid, never a bride" as Jane, played by Katherine Heigl of "Grey's Anatomy," endures 27 trips down the aisle as a bridesmaid, never having found a groom for herself.

Jane is in love with her boss, played by Edward Burns, who of course treats his ever-assistant like a faithful puppy.

The situation is exacerbated when Jane's sister, Tess, played by Malin Akerman, becomes engaged to Jane's boss/crush. Tess, who is beautiful but lacking in compassion, doesn't see her sister's anguish as she forces her to help with endless wedding plans.

Meanwhile, Jane meets Kevin, played by James Marsden, a bemused, sarcastic wedding guest who - surprise - turns out to be the author of Jane's favorite wedding articles.

"27 Dresses" is formulaic and predictable, and the movie also lacks originality and wit. The script seems cliché with lines like, "You'd rather focus on other people's Kodak moments than make one of your own."

Director Anne Fletcher, a former movie choreographer whose lone directing credit before "27 Dresses" was 2006's dance-heavy "Step Up," fails to make the movie stand out among the dozens of recent romantic comedies centered around nuptials. The movie's leading lady is its only saving grace. Heigl is funny, self-deprecating and likable, even during her less virtuous moments.

She and the blue-eyed Marsden pair well on screen as they realize their attraction to each other and deal with their respective relationship baggage.

career spans about 15 years and includes such hits as the "X-Men" series and "The Notebook," his stock has risen of late with roles in "Enchanted" and "Superman Returns." He makes a worthy partner for Heigl, and their chemistry is playful and sweet.

Overall, what you see is what you get with "27 Dresses." It uses no revolutionary plot devices or cinematic techniques, but it will be more than satisfactory for someone looking to watch the next "My Best Friend's Wedding."

INKED | Students advise putting thought, time into decision to get tattoo

"I was young and rebellious," she said. "I just wanted to make my dad mad. And he was."

"I thought of that movie as like the Shakespeare story of our generation — and I've always loved literature and reading, and I thought that would be something I would always love," Macke said. "Plus, I love the religious aspect of it."

Since then, Macke, now 31, has gotten four more tattoos — all with personal meaning. Her most recent is a lotus flower on the back of her neck. Macke said to her, the lotus symbolizes overcoming obstacles in life.

"For a lot of people, I think it's more about getting the tattoo. For me, it's much more about the having of the tattoo," she said.

Chad Miller, sophomore in electrical engineering, said he also understands the importance of thinking through the decision to get a tattoo.

"You're nervous because you're not sure if it will hurt or if you will like it, but at the same time you're really excited because you're getting something that you've maybe always wanted," Miller said.

He also said if someone is considering getting a tattoo, it's important to consider all angles of the decision.

"Make sure you're getting something you'll like forever," he said. "Also, find a tattoo artist that you're comfortable with."

Miller has one tattoo —

a Korean character meaning "respect" — but he said it is one he put thought into and has significance for him.

"The word respect means a lot to me since I've been doing martial arts for most of my life," he said. "And I chose to use a Korean character because most of my martial arts are Korean."

Becker also said she feels confident in her decision to show off her tattoos.

"A lot of people say that I'm a 'walking billboard,' but I don't see it as that," Becker said. "I see it as self-expression."

"Tattoos are also a way to open up to people. Like when you smile at someone, they will usually smile back," she said. "When they see your tattoos and ask you about it, you get the chance to share what it means to you, to share a part of yourself. And when you open up to people, that opens them up to others, too."

messaging system might be convenient to students, Rawson said it is important for people to view the system as just an additional way to communicate.

"We recognize the positives and negatives of this," he said. "We recognize the growth in cell phone usage. On the other hand, if people are in a movie or in class they might not have their phone on."

In fact, the university will not rely on this method solely, he said. The university has several emergency notifications in place including a reverse 911 telephone call system, where a 30-second recorded message from the K-State police will be sent out to all students, staff and faculty; a Web page override, in which all Web pages at www.ksu.edu will be directed to an emergency information page; e-mail advisory; campus carillon, in which the Anderson Hall tower will be used as a public address system, and other methods, he said.

"During the ice storm we relied on local media and the K-State Web page and web-mail to get news out. If we would have had it in place it would have been helpful," he said.

All current students, faculty and staff are eligible to sign up, but the service is optional. Only one cell phone number per user can be registered.

Sign-up is through the university eProfile system. Go to <https://eid.ksu.edu/> and sign in, then click the "manage your emergency contact settings" link.

Users can sign up at any time and can disable and re-enable the service at any time. Users who don't receive a confirmation message should contact the IT Help Desk, 785-532-7727.

Although the system will be tested twice each year on specified days, K-State cannot guarantee that emergency text messages will be received in a timely fashion.

Users are responsible for any messaging charges from their phone service providers and for keeping their contact information up to date.

for the Union Program Council, said, "My freshman year I went to the [Expo], and that led me to the organizations that I am involved in now."

The Expo provided activities for students like making their own hot chocolate, s'mores and snowflake picture frames. Campbell said these activities were in conjunction to the theme of the evening.

"Our theme is 'Warm up to a new semester,'" Campbell said.

The event also featured swing dancers from the K-State Swing and Salsa Club.

Most of the organizations that had information booths set up in the Union gave away candy and take-home souvenirs like pens and keychains to attract students to their tables. The purpose is to talk to the students about the organization and send them home with pamphlets and papers with more information that might have not come across in the conversation at the organization's table.

"This [Expo] has helped me to see organizations that I can get involved in," Lambert said. "If I only join one organization, I will be involved on campus and possible join other organizations."

Rodeo gamble

Sitting in the middle of Weber Arena, four professors watch as a sheep is released during a joking round of bull poker. The next round was played with four contestants from the audience with a real bull.

Cowboy poker amusing at first, then turns dangerous

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The fifth-annual Brett Cushenbery Memorial Bullriding gave poker players a run for their money on Saturday during an event called cowboy poker at Weber Arena.

"Coming up here, we've got some cowboy poker ... if you know what I'm talkin' about," the announcer said.

Some audience members knew what he was talking about — it could be a dangerous event. Others shrugged their shoulders, not knowing what to expect.

He encouraged the K-State professors in the stands to come down for a game of poker played in the middle of the arena. The players were Ken Odde, head of the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry; Dave Nichols, professor in animal sciences and industry; Dan Moser, associate professor in animal sciences and industry; and Russ Gottlob, rodeo coach.

The four sat down at the card table in the middle of the ring, not knowing what to expect. The gates flung open, and a sheep came rushing into the arena. Cowboys and clowns playfully tried to excite the sheep, and audience members chuckled. They knew what was supposed to come out of that gate in real cowboy poker.

After several more rounds of bullriding, the next poker contestants made their way to the card table in the middle of the arena, wearing plain street clothes. These players actually bought into the game for $1 each to win a prize of $100 for the last person sitting at the table.

They got comfortable and the cowboys and clowns manned their stations around the arena. A couple more cowboys on horses entered the ring as well.

The gate shot open once more to reveal not a sheep, but a Mexican fighting bull. It ran straight for the card table, and within seconds, tossed it to the ground and jostled all the contestants to their feet. But the bull went after one player in particular, Dave Schreiner of Frankfort, Kan.

"It was a rush," he said still dusty from being knocked around the arena. "By the time I saw the bull, he was right behind me."

Schreiner said though he knows what cowboy poker entails, he had half-expected a sheep to enter the arena again instead of a bull.

The bull butted its head against Schreiner a few times while Schreiner was balled up on the ground, covering his head. The other players had backed away from the bull, but

New city assistant manager starts term

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lauren Palmer moved to Manhattan a week ago, but she already has familiarized herself with the city.

Palmer starts her role as assistant city manager today. She replaces Diane Stoddard, who resigned as Manhattan's deputy city manager in October 2007 to take the open position as the city of Lawrence's assistant manager.

To learn as much as she could about the city, Palmer said she read the Manhattan Mercury and the city's Web site and studied the city's budget.

"I just came out here a week early before I came to my job and tried to observe as much as I can what the community is about," she said. "I'm excited to get started and figure out how I can make contributions to the office. It's really important to me, coming to a new community, to get engaged in the community."

Jason Hilgers, who also serves as an assistant city manager, said Palmer will primarily assist with economic development funding assistance in collaboration with the Chamber of Commerce and develop agenda packets for City Commission meetings and work sessions.

Among other responsibilities, Palmer also will be responsible for directing legislative and intergovernmental activities to facilitate interaction among city officials, city management and state legislature and will serve as the city manager's liaison to the Riley County Law Board and other committees.

Palmer previously served as management analyst in the city manager's office in Des Moines, Iowa, where she served as the liaison to four city departments; coordinated grant administration, contract oversight, performance measurement and reporting; and worked on budget development, according to the city of Manhattan's Web site.

Police seize narcotics equipment from store

Riley County police found drug paraphernalia at Rockstar and Rogers, 715 N. 12th St., while serving a search warrant on Thursday, according to a Riley County Police Department report.

The warrant was part of an ongoing investigation into the sale of drug paraphernalia in the Manhattan area.

During the search at Rockstar and Rogers, police found items used to store, contain, conceal, weigh and ingest illicit drugs, according to the police report.

RCPD Lt. Kurt Moldrup said the police department had investigated a drug transaction within the business, which connected the seized paraphernalia with the use of drugs. Moldrup said the drug paraphernalia were being sold in the store at one point.

No arrests were made and further investigation is pending.

Spring recruitment sponsored by Greek Affairs for first time

By Jenna Scavuzzo
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This spring, Greek Affairs is publicizing a new approach to recruiting members into a sorority's sisterhood. While many might associate sorority recruitment with a rigid, structured and stressful week schedule, Sorority Spring Recruitment allows its participants to explore the 11 sorority houses in a relaxed, personable setting.

Though Greek Affairs and the Panhellenic Council have sponsored Sorority Spring Recruitment in the past, this spring the Greek organizations have worked to positively publicize its informal version of sorority recruitment.

Previously, only houses which had not matched their member quotas participated in spring recruitment.

This year marks the first year that each sorority house opened its recruitment to potential new sorority members, though only six chapters are accepting new members.

Chi Omega, Kappa Alpha Theta, Kappa Delta, Alpha Chi Omega, Sigma Kappa and Pi Beta Phi are the only houses aiming to distribute bids for spring membership.

"Spring Recruitment is a chance to offer girls who hadn't gone through formal recruitment a look at and get a feel for all the houses in a less threatening environment," said Erin Parrott, vice president of the Panhellenic Council. "It allows girls to get a better feel for houses by offering them more time to look around and get to know individual members better in an actual setting, rather than a structured setting, which is how Formal Recruitment is."

Recruitment numbers have not dropped, and have in fact increased to the highest number ever this past fall, said Kimberly Jones, director of continuous open bidding and retention.

However, many chapters have suffered a problem with members leaving during the school year, she said.

Spring Recruitment is designed to both recruit new members in the spring to replace previously lost ones or allow potential new members to begin looking at the various chapters before Formal Recruitment begins, Jones said.

"It helps to have a full house," Jones said. "... Spring Recruitment aims to have each house reach this goal."

There has been a tremendous increase in the number of girls signed up to participate in Spring Recruitment this year, said Jones. Fifty-four girls are going through the Spring Recruitment process.

"Spring Recruitment improves the Greek community as a whole because it gives the sororities more publicity, which will allow everyone to see how great the Greek community truly is," Jones said. "Also, opening up the houses allows for a level playing field and ties and strengthens the houses together. Spring Recruitment really promotes Greek unity."

To participate in the Spring Recruitment process, prospective members gave their names to Greek Affairs, which distributed the names to all the houses, said Parrott.

The potential members were told which houses were accepting new spring members into their chapters, but were allowed to take tours of all 11 during Open House.

The chapters that are searching for and accepting new membership will continue to invite prospective members to sorority events after

TODAY 1986: CHALLENGER EXPLODES

As the space shuttle Challenger lifted off from Cape Canaveral, Fla., hundreds on the ground stared in disbelief as the shuttle exploded in a fuming plume of smoke and fire. Millions more watched the wrenching tragedy unfold on live television. There were no survivors among the seven-member crew.

Christa McAuliffe was on her way to becoming the first ordinary U.S. civilian to travel into space. McAuliffe, a 37-year-old high school social studies teacher, won a competition that earned her a place on the Challenger crew. After lengthy investigations, it was determined that the explosion was caused by the failure of an "O-ring" seal in one of the two solid-fuel rockets.

TUESDAY 1936: U.S. BASEBALL HALL OF FAME ELECTS 1ST MEMBERS

Ty Cobb, Babe Ruth, Honus Wagner, Christy Matthewson and Walter Johnson were the first members inducted into the U.S. Baseball Hall of Fame.

The Hall of Fame actually had its beginnings in 1935, when plans were made to build a museum devoted to baseball and its 100-year history.

A private organization based in Cooperstown, N.Y., called the Clark Foundation thought establishing the Baseball Hall of Fame in their city would help to reinvigorate the area's Depression-ravaged economy by attracting tourists.

Today, with approximately 350,000 visitors per year, the Hall of Fame continues to be the hub of all things baseball.

It has elected 278 individuals, in all, including 225 players, 17 managers, 8 umpires and 28 executives and pioneers.

WEDNESDAY 1948: MOHANDAS GANDHI ASSASSINATED

Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi, the political and spiritual leader of the Indian independence movement, was assassinated in New Delhi by a Hindu fanatic.

Known as Mahatma, or "the great soul," during his lifetime, Gandhi's persuasive methods of civil disobedience influenced leaders of civil rights movements around the world, especially Martin Luther King Jr. in the United States.

THURSDAY 1968: VIET CONG ATTACK U.S. EMBASSY

On this day in 1968, as part of the Tet Offensive, a squad of Viet Cong guerrillas attacked the U.S. Embassy in Saigon, Vietnam. The soldiers seized the embassy and held it for six hours until an assault force of U.S. paratroopers landed by helicopter on the building's roof and routed the Viet Cong.

FRIDAY 1884: OXFORD DICTIONARY PRINTED

On this day in 1884, the first portion, or fascicle, of the Oxford English Dictionary, considered the most comprehensive and accurate dictionary of the English language, was published.

Today, the dictionary's second edition is available online to subscribers and is updated quarterly with over 1,000 new entries and revisions.

Study finds weight-loss surgery helpful in fighting Type-2 diabetes

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Weight-loss surgeries have proven more effective for curing Type 2 diabetes than standard medical treatment, according to a recent study that appeared in an article Wednesday in The New York Times.

Sixty patients participated in the study, and 73 percent of those who had the surgery had complete remissions of diabetes. Of the patients who were given counseling on diet and exercise instead of having surgery, only 13 percent had remissions of diabetes, according to the article.

Since Type 2 diabetes usually is caused by obesity, those who lost an average of 20.7 percent of their body weight through surgery were more likely to be rid of their diabetes. Those who did not have surgery lost an average of 1.7 percent of their body weight, according to the article.

The surgery performed in the study is called adjustable gastric banding. A band is inserted through two small slits and is cinched around the stomach so patients will eat less.

Dr. Fouad Hachem, an attending surgeon at the Geary Community Hospital in Geary County, said Type 2 diabetes is caused when a person's body cannot generate enough insulin to accommodate its large size.

Insulin facilitates ingested sugar getting into the body's cells. He said when there is not enough insulin to perform this digestion, the sugar stays outside of the cells and turns into fat.

Hachem said weight-loss surgeries have been proven to cure diabetes 90 percent of the time. He said conventional methods like diet and exercise work less than 1 percent of the time for people who are morbidly obese.

"No studies say one surgery is better than the other," Hachem said. "They all achieve one ultimate goal — weight loss. If [the diabetes] is not reversed, at least it's better under control."

Erin Dawson, assistant director of fitness at Peters Recreation Center, said people should try conventional methods for curing their diabetes before surgical methods.

"[Nutrition and exercise] are definitely something people should try first," Dawson said. "They will have to live a healthy lifestyle anyway after surgery. Why put off the inevitable?"

She said to prevent or improve diabetes, people should engage in cardiovascular exercise three to five days a week. She also recommended two to three days of weight-lifting.

"Exercise plays a huge part, [as do] talking to a dietitian, and eating well," Dawson said.

Steph Moore, senior in dietetics, said her grandfather has Type 2 diabetes. She said he probably would not be willing to have weight-loss surgery for it because of his age, so he diets and exercises instead.

But eating healthy can be hard for him since he is "set in his ways" and isn't ready to change his lifestyle, Moore said.

The people who caught their diabetes early, within two years, had more success with the surgery, according to the article. Moore said she thinks surgery would be better for younger people.

"I think surgery would be a last resort after trying diet and exercise and consulting a dietitian," Moore said.

She said surgery might be too dangerous for people who have a very high body mass index because the wound would heal poorly, along with other factors. She said many places that perform these surgeries require patients to meet with a dietitian after having surgery.

Proposed Hy-Vee store plans to expand

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The city of Manhattan has been involved in a downtown redevelopment controversy for the past several months.

The latest and perhaps most disputed issue has been surrounding the implementation and the expansion of a Hy-Vee grocery store in the north side of the downtown redevelopment area.

An amendment to the store's development plan was passed earlier this month, adding an additional 10,000 square feet onto its original 68,500 square feet design, said Karen Mayse, president for Manhattan's League of Women Voters.

"With that vote, the store basically had the green light to build," said city commissioner Jim Sherow, who voted against the amendment.

"The store just wasn't meeting the original layout and design that everybody had agreed upon," he said. "I think the other commissioners who voted for it weren't happy with it; they just didn't see a viable alternative."

City Commissioner Bruce Snead said he voted for the expansion because the role of the north district — where the Hy-Vee will be located — in the financing of downtown redevelopment was an important consideration.

He said he felt passing the amendment was the best action for moving the South district reconstruction forward.

However, Mayse said League members thought the city should have better planning when it comes to the redevelopment.

There are already four large grocery stores within a mile of where the Hy-Vee will be located, and she said the League thinks the new store will put at least one of them out of business.

"You're causing the problem you were hoping to solve with redevelopment," she said.

Because of the amendment, Mayse said the new grocery store will not only be more than twice the size of the Dillons near Tuttle Creek Boulevard, but it also will come within four feet of the city's historic Strausser house — the oldest standing house in Manhattan.

In addition, she said it will limit the total amount of parking for the area's proposed housing developments.

"We think it's really important to have housing down there," Mayse said. "We need a mixed development in that area, and having housing will provide consumers who will frequent businesses downtown."

Limited parking leads to limited living space, she said.

Despite much opposition, the expansion has been mostly finalized.

The only aspect in question depends on whether the state law prohibiting the sale of wine and spirits in supermarkets is changed.

If this happens, Hy-Vee plans to build even bigger, she said.

Mayse also said at this point, the community does not have much faith in the redevelopment plans, in terms of believing what they were initially told.

But Snead said he disagreed.

There are residents who will never be happy with the redevelopment's outcome, Snead said, but there also are those who understand that during the planning process, ideas evolve and are modified.

"I think Hy-Vee will be successful in this community," he said. "The public concern about downtown redevelopment is an important one, and one we need to address with presentation and the sharing of information of where we are, and where we're going."

HIT | NICE WEATHER

Despite Kansas's roller-coaster history of temperatures, we're on top and above freezing for the time being.

MISS | NO GOOD TV

Between the writers' strike and it being the first weekend since late July that football has not been on television, there are too many boring sports events and re-runs to even turn the television on.

HIT | ENTHUSIASM

To the guy who wore a fully armored costume last Thursday to the Activities Carnival and Winter Expo. We applaud you for walking across campus all-clad.

MISS | WESTBORO BAPTIST CHURCH

HIT | K-STATE VS KU

Usually there is not much on the line during the Sunflower Showdown. But this year, that's different. The teams are playing for the No. 1 spot in the Big 12 Conference.

MISS | SPARTANS TRUMP RAMBO

Unnecessary actions

Authorities botch post-Katrina crime responses

Relief efforts — or lack thereof — after Hurricane Katrina spawned the rebirth of the government finger-pointing game that now is responsible for the unemployment of at least six government employees in Washington, D.C.

AUBREE CASPER

Six people in an already-corrupt city might seem far, far away, but Mayor Adrian Fenty made an irrational decision in response to the murders of four girls as a means of covering his own office and dodging the government inefficiency bullet.

According to CNN.com, homeless, single mother Banita Jacks believed her children "were possessed by demons and died in their sleep." Jacks, it seemed, murdered them and left their decaying bodies in her mother's home for at least 15 days, a crime with which she had been charged.

However, the point is that within hours of finding the deceased young girls, each between 5 and 16 years of age, six Washington, D.C. social-welfare employees were fired in response to the quadruple homicide. The premise for their dismissal, Fenty said, was they ignored previous attempts to remove the girls from their troubled mother's care and "other people didn't do their job in the way they're supposed to."

Here's the catch — the main tip-off was a school nurse at the younger girls' school reported Jacks' suspicious actions, but all she could give to the city social workers involved was that they lived in a van.

OK, great. All city government social workers have time to go off van-hunting in a huge city to find a mom who might or might not be a weirdo.

Pre-Katrina, this wouldn't have happened — ever. Did it occur when the Yates children were found drowned? No. How about when Francis Newton killed her husband and two kids? You guessed it — nope. In fact, the American Anthropological Association reported more than 200 mothers kill their own children each year. Where were city employees in these cases? Why didn't they get fired? This only echoes the response of national and Louisiana government officials where Louisiana newspapers reported the firings of dozens of government employees in response to unfavorable relief efforts. What if Gov. Kathleen Sebelius fired some Manhattan city snow-plow drivers after the ice storm last month because they took too long to plow Marla-tt Avenue and two drivers died in an accident as a result? There is no excuse for Mother Nature or human nature.

This isn't the first time anyone has heard of such a horrific event. It also doesn't sound like Fenty cares as much about the untimely murders of innocent young girls as he does about the reputation of his city agencies.

Fearing a Hurricane Katrina-like backlash from more important government officials should not leave any mayor with grounds for the immediate firing of six city workers, especially in Washington.

Imagine being the social worker who was told bad things were happening to children living out of some random van in a city of nearly 600,000 people — 10,000 of which are reported as homeless according to the U.S. Census Bureau. I mean, really? Talk about a needle in a haystack.

People should read to gain knowledge, gratification

Martin Luther King Jr. Day speaker Ice-T said the plasma TV is the No. 1 cause of complacency in America. With the iPod, Facebook.com and YouTube.com, it is easy to see how technology is in hyper drive.

BLAKE OSBORN

As a result, the United States is experiencing the humiliation of the written word.

Twenty-three years ago in his book "Amusing Ourselves to Death," social critic Neil Postman observed this shift in history. He divided the shift into the age of exposition and the age of show business.

The former was characterized by the ability of the reader to think critically and analytically, because of the invention of the printing press in the 16th century.

The latter, starting at the beginning of the 20th century, deconstructed this age. Postman claimed, with TV's Peek-a-Boo mentality.

According to Postman's book, reading enables one with a "tolerance for delayed response."

The Peek-a-Boo mentality contradicts this ability because it pops images before readers, exposing them to "endless entertainment."

In his book, Postman said it is not bad that there is entertainment on TV, but the problem is everything, even the news, is presented as entertainment.

If Postman were alive today, I wonder what he would call today's society. Maybe he would call it the Age of the Internet, which appears to be the new medium that has united the world in an unprecedented manner.

Thus TV, YouTube.com and Facebook.com each compete with the book by constantly overwhelming society with images. The stakes are higher than ever for the book because people are more likely to grab the remote than grab a book.

With this in mind, I have a suggestion. Turn off your iPod, unplug the TV, put your cell phone on silent and go pick up a book. I don't mean you have to go out and buy Leo Tolstoy's "War and Peace" or Thucydides' "History of the Peloponnesian War."

Start with something smaller — maybe a book you read in high school like "The Scarlet Letter" by Nathaniel Hawthorne, or "The Great Gatsby" by F. Scott Fitzgerald.

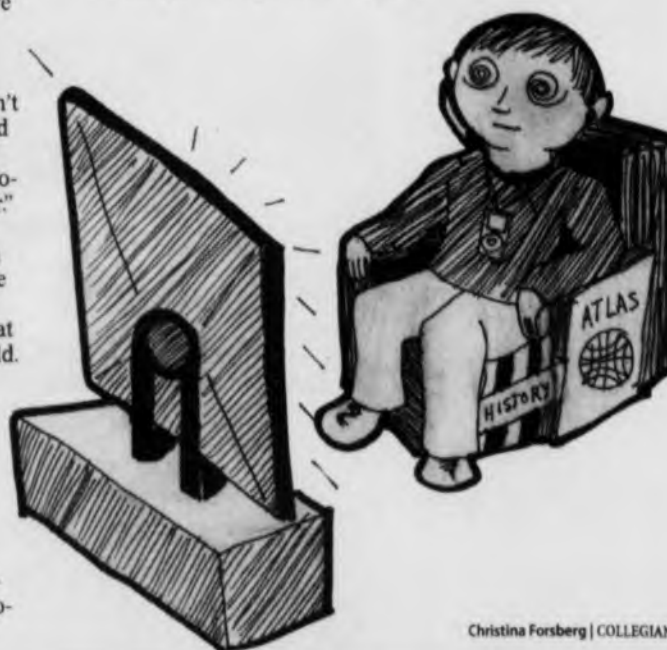

Reading has benefits that cannot be obtained through TV. According to Postman's book, reading refines abstract thinking, encourages rationality and rewards critical thinking. The eye cannot glaze over words as quickly as images. It must re-read and process what is written.

Greek dramatist Aristophanes once said, "By words, the mind is winged." So give your mind wings by reading words written across the ages. Stretch your imagination and your mind — go pick up a classic.

Ice storm, wet weather leave area soil unusually ideal for planting trees, plants

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan's ice storm still can be seen through the tangle of trees that were destroyed by strong winds, but the storm left behind more than just a mess for city workers. It also left the soil with more moisture than it usually sees in the winter.

Ward Upham, K-State Research and Extension horticulturist, said this year's soil conditions are ideal for planting trees.

"This winter has been a fairly wet winter," he said. "Trees can get off to a good start without extra watering."

Charles Barden, K-State Research and Extension forester, said Kansas is typically dry in the winter, but the melting of snow and ice helped create better conditions for the state's soil.

With the destruction of many trees after the ice storm, planting trees is exactly what Manhattan residents should be thinking about. Joshua Pease, Kansas Forest Service conservation forester, said trees provide windbreaks that benefit all parts of life, including protection for livestock in the winter, habitats for wildlife, protection for crops and the prevention of road-covering snow drifts.

Windbreaks also slow the wind down and reduce the evaporation of moisture from the soil.

After December's ice storm, many of the trees across Kansas were demolished and the amount of windbreaks were reduced across the state. This does not help the already low number of windbreaks in Kansas, Pease said.

"The windbreaks — they're really in decline across Kansas," Pease said. "It's not just a western Kansas thing. It pretty much stretches from one border to another. It's really something we need to take serious."

Windbreaks need to be maintained by renovating old trees and replacing those that are destroyed in storms, Pease said.

"If you think back to the days of the Dust Bowl era, we had a sincere lack of trees," he said. "There was a tremendous amount of soil loss. Those trees helped reduce all that."

"We just don't want to get back into that sort of situation. The severe storms still occur. That's why we need to get those back in shape — to conserve soil, reduce erosion and it's better for the crops."

Though the actual act of planting trees is not popular right now, Pease said it is something people should be thinking about for the months ahead.

Upham said trees can be planted throughout the year, though spring is the traditional time, because plants put out plenty of roots and can get established in the ground quickly.

Barden said the best time of year to plant trees is during early spring, starting in March.

"The best thing to do for trees is to have the soil well prepared and good weed control," he said. "A mistake is to plant the trees and then not check on them for months."

Barden said it is important to control the weeds for the first year or two of the tree's growth, especially during the summertime when weeds are at their highest.

Upham said this time of year people can start planning the types of trees to plant and their placement.

The Kansas Forest Service Web site has a list of deciduous trees it recommends for windbreaks.

It categorizes the species of trees into areas of the state that they should be grown.

The bur oak, hackberry, honeylocust, lacebark elm and Russian mulberry are all listed as adaptable to the eastern, central and western thirds of the state.

As the site recommends, planters should consider soil characteristics to make the final decision of the species.

The ice storms provided the best aftermath for planting trees. The board tied to the tree helps for straight growth and stability.

ROTC cadets learn to communicate effectively on the battle field

By Rebecca Perez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

FORT RILEY — Most students take communication for granted. They have cell phones, e-mail, Facebook.com and MySpace.com to keep in touch with friends and family. K-State's Army ROTC students learned communication on the battle field is not nearly as easy.

The ROTC students spent Saturday morning at Fort Riley's Close Combat Tactical Training center operating Bradley fighting vehicles and Abrams tanks simulators.

While learning how to operate the vehicles and fire the weapons is important, it is the communication skills that the cadets learn while performing the mission that is the point of the exercise.

The mission was set at the National Training Center in Fort Irwin, Calif. Cadets were around in a basin surrounded by mountains and had to traverse the terrain through a narrow gap between mountain ranges.

The goal was to stay in a formation that looks like a piece of pie called a wedge formation. When they got to the narrow pass they were supposed to move closer to each other, but keep the same formation.

The cadets entered their simulators at about 10 a.m. and spent the next 30 minutes working out real-life communication issues on the radios.

Cadet Aaron Scherffius, senior in construction science and management and the battle commander, said the most frustrating part was getting everyone on their proper channels and talking to each other.

It was only an hour from when the mission finally started to the end of the mission, but in that hour their communication improved.

Lt. Col. George Belin,

professor of military science, told the cadets they went from giving directions in terms of left and right to using cardinal directions. They also improved their ability to keep the platoons together by telling vehicles to drive at specific speeds instead of saying faster or slower.

Belin and Lt. Col. Curt Slick, assistant professor of military science, commended the cadets on their outstanding performance.

"Once you got off [from the starting point], communication was really pretty good between the platoons and the company commander," Belin said to all the cadets.

Belin explained to the cadets that communication is more important than anything else on the battle field.

As a leader, the focus is not fighting the enemy, it is making sure your platoon and company is functioning to their highest potential, Belin said.

"That's why communication is really critical, so you can see and understand what the battle field looks like for everybody in your platoon, so you can best maneuver them and put them in a position to kill the enemy," Belin said.

After a quick debriefing of the mission, Belin called one of the cadets to read the top quotes from the mission that displayed poor communication.

"The communication was really good, so there were only five quotes this time," Cadet Scherffius said.

Some of the most memorable quotes were: "No. 5, I think there is someone shooting at us, yeah, I'm pretty sure they're shooting at us; No. 4 Hello, does anyone remember the button you push to go faster and No. 1 I have no idea where you guys are, but I'm pretty sure you are right in front of me."

With 10 minutes 38 seconds left in the game, the entirety of Bramlage Coliseum knew whose house it was. And they chanted his name — Michael Beasley.

Freshman forward Beasley's 33-point performance was his seventh 30-point game this season, tying the record held by Bob Boozer (1958-59) and Norris Coleman (1985-86) for 30-point games in a season.

He also grabbed 15 rebounds, which is not only his highest total in conference play this, but also catapulted him into second-place for most double-doubles in a season. To take the record from 1961's Larry Comley, he will need two more to tie and three to take it out-right.

"Everybody who has played us in the last 10 games has gone out of their way to make it hard for him," coach Frank Martin said. "Earlier in the year, we didn't understand how to play when teams made it hard for him. Now he's getting a better understanding of getting double- and triple-teamed by college players who are bigger and stronger than he is and the rest of our guys have a better understanding of what to do."

K-State (14-4, 4-0 Big 12 Conference) was carried by Beasley to a dominating 82-57 victory over Iowa State (12-8, 2-3 Big 12).

Freshman guard Jacob Pullen, who had 13, freshman forward Bill Walker, who had 10, and junior forward Darren Kent, who had 11, also scored in double-figures for the Wildcats.

Kent's performance served as the game's surprise. He was perfect from beyond the arc, sinking three three-point shots.

"Darren's a young man that what he brings to our basketball team is that skill level," Martin said. "He gives us another guy in there who can catch and pass, and he makes it difficult for people because he can shoot the basketball. He's got confidence about what we're all about and what he's all about and he's playing that way."

K-State got off to a sluggish start, scoring first on a three-point-shot from Walker, but then stalled until the offense kick-started at the 12-minute mark, when Beasley nailed a jumper to make it 11-6.

K-State then went on a 11-4 scoring tear that ended with a three-point-shot from Beasley to take K-State to an 11-point lead. Beasley described the first stretch of the game as unacceptable.

"We came out lackadaisical," he said. "We came out like we were just going to win, but we picked it up through the course of the game and just did what we had to do."

Although K-State only shot 21 percent from the field in the first 10 minutes of the half, they were able to get back up to 40 percent from the field at the end of the half, including 50 percent from beyond the arc.

Iowa State shot poorly throughout the game. The Cyclones shot 36 percent in the first half and 31 percent in the second half and only converted nine three-point-shots in the duration of the game.

They were led in scoring by sophomore guard Wesley Johnson, who had 20 points, and freshman forward Craig Brackins, who had 10 points. Their leading rebounder was senior center Jiri Hubalek, who had eight boards.

"I didn't like our effort," said Iowa State coach Greg McDermott. "I thought at times we were selfish and for the most part, showed little passion. That can't be what we are about."

Martin said although it might have looked like the team looked past Iowa State to Wednesday's matchup with Kansas, the team must be completely focused on the next game.

"Anytime you compete for a championship, the next game on your schedule is the biggest game of the year," he said. "As long as you approach it that way, you have a chance. We were pretty good about approaching it that way. This conference is a monster — it's absurd how difficult it is to win in this conference."

STILLWATER, Okla. — When K-State needed a leader and someone to step up Sunday against Oklahoma State, it was senior guard Kimberly Dietz who took center stage for the Wildcats.

After scoring 20 points, all in the second half, Dietz led No. 22 K-State (14-5, 6-0 Big 12 Conference) to its ninth-straight win, edging the No. 14 Cowgirls 68-63 at Gallagher-Iba Arena.

It is the best start for K-State since the inception of the Big 12; however, the Wildcats started 8-0 three times during their stint in the Big Eight Conference. They are tied with Baylor for first place in the Big 12.

Oklahoma State (16-3, 4-2 Big 12) contained Dietz in the first half sending the Wildcats' leading scorer to the locker room with zero points. With 15:20 left in the game and K-State trailing 37-30, Dietz put up her first points when she hit a three pointer.

Less than a minute later, Dietz hit another three pointer to cut the Cowgirls lead to 37-36.

"I was just tired of being down and my teammates were running our offense so well at that time, and it was just an open look," Dietz said.

What ensued was a 15-2 run by K-State with nine points, all three pointers, from Dietz and six points from junior guard Shalee Lehning to give the Wildcats a 45-39 advantage with 11:28 left in the game.

"This is obviously a tale of two halves," said K-State coach Deb Patterson. "I don't think we felt at halftime we were as efficient and effective as we were capable of

Women lead team, Big 12 to victory over Mountain West Conference

By Joel Aschbrenner

K-State's track and field team helped lead the Big 12 Conference to a victory over the Mountain West Conference in the Conference Challenge on Saturday in Lincoln, Neb.

The Wildcats were joined by Missouri and Nebraska to represent the Big 12 against Air Force, Brigham Young and Colorado State of the Mountain West. The Big 12 outscored the Mountain West 224-145 in the dual meet. The Wildcat women led all schools, scoring 53 points.

"On the women's side, there were a lot of good performances," said track and field coach Cliff Rovelto. "There were a significant number of personal bests. Across the board in general the girls competed really well."

BONDS

The women notched seven event victories, as well as three one-two finishes. In the weight throw, junior Loren Groves and senior Laci Heller had throws of 67-00.50 and 65-01.25, respectively, to place first and second.

In both the 60-meter and the 200-meter races, sophomore Donnie Parrish edged out senior Marnyka Honeycutt to give the Wildcats and the Big 12 one-two finishes. Parrish and Honeycutt posted times of 7.61 and 7.67 in the 60-meter race and 24.24 and 24.86 in the 200-meter race, respectively.

Parrish and Honeycutt also were on winning the 4x400-meter-relay team, along with senior Morgan Bonds and freshman Tiara Walpool. Bonds also won the 600-yard run with a time of 1:22.46. Junior Lauren Fisher posted a time of 57.71 to win the 400-meter. Senior Thomaia Polydorou's triple jump of 12.35 meters gave the Wildcats another victory.

The men were not as successful in the meet, only scoring nine points. The lone victory came from sophomore Sam James in the 800-meter, with a time of 1:51.81.

Rovelto said several of the men's performances would not show because they are decathletes and do not specialize in one event. There were athletes, however, who impressed him.

"There were a few guys that had great meets," Rovelto said. "Mike Myer ran really well in the 200. The 60 was also a solid race for him. Sam [James], in the 800, ran very well. Colin [Swaney], in the mile, ran well."

Myer placed second in the 200-meter and third in the 60-meter. Swaney came in fourth in the mile.

The men also had several athletes who did not compete in their best event. Scott Sellers, 2007 NCAA outdoor high jump champion, competed in the long jump and triple jump, placing third in both.

Rovelto said he performed well considering that he was not competing in his best event.

Super Bowl features rematch, shows versatility of players on both sides

The rematch has arrived. A mere six weeks after taking the

New England Patriots to the wire, in a game watched by about 25 million people according to the Nielsen TV ratings, the New York Giants will get another shot at ruining the Patriots' dream season.

The saga of the Patriots season while being historic also has been tumultuous. Coach Bill Belichick was fined $500,000 and the team was fined $250,000 and lost their 2008 first round draft pick for stealing signals in a Week One victory over the New York Jets.

Wide receiver Randy Moss, who was thought to have revived his troubled career with the Patriots, had a restraining order placed against him on Jan. 6 by a Florida woman. Moss will miss preliminary hearings today as he practices with the team in preparation for Super Bowl XLII, at 5:30 p.m. Sunday from the University of Phoenix Stadium in Glendale, Ariz.

TYLER SHARP

Even with those events in mind, the historical implications of this game are obviously monumental. After their initial victory over the Giants on Dec. 29, the Patriots took care of the Jacksonville Jaguars and topped the San Diego Chargers.

The Patriots' undefeated record has not been the only mark broken this season. When Tom Brady and Moss connected for a four-yard touchdown in the second quarter of the Giants game, the duo each tied their own respective records. Moss equaled Jerry Rice's record for receiving touchdowns in a season with 22 and Brady tied Peyton Manning's record for passing touchdowns in a season with 49. The touchdown strike also helped the Patriots eclipse the NFL record for points scored in a season with 589, eclipsing a nine-year old mark by the Minnesota Vikings.

It would be easy to diminish the value of the New York Giants season in which Eli Manning has established himself as a quarterback of the future. Tom Coughlin captured these emotions with his comments in a Saturday chat transcript at www.Giants.com.

"Eli, he is playing very well and he is very focused," he said. "He has been very accurate, played through all kinds of weather and really has been able to stay right on course the entire time."

The Giants defense has also been stout this year led by the perennial presence of defensive end Michael Strahan and the team's only Pro Bowl selection in fellow defensive end Osi Umenyiora. This all was impressive for a team that stumbled to an 0-2 start, and looked to be well on their way to a hard season before ending the year on a 13-1 streak.

Since the Patriots 38-35 win over the Giants, the anticipation for a rematch grew with each team's progression through the playoffs. With Tom Brady no longer sporting a boot on his right foot and the Giants ready for their new opportunity to ruin the Patriots' perfect season, Super Bowl XLII promises to be a wild ride.

Different outfits fit variety of female body shapes

By Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Shopping can be difficult when women do not know how to find clothes that compliment their body shapes. But shopping can be made easy if women follow guidelines about what styles work best for their body types.

"The biggest thing is when girls come to the store and they focus on sizes," said Sara Meyer, owner of Zotcis Attire. "Size is important, but they should not have that mindset and find clothing that fits well."

Meyer said there are many styles women can wear to make them appear thinner, which includes wearing dark-denim jeans and belts around the waist. Belts around the waist appear to make the waist line smaller, she said.

Meyer said she thinks dark denim is the best type of material because it works for everybodys shape and is overall slimming and stylish.

Petite: Women who are petite and want to elongate themselves should consider wearing heels, Meyer said. Petite women also should wear more form-fitting clothing because their body frames are smaller and clothing won't be too baggy or loose fitting. Meyer said many petite women can wear longer tops that hit the waist area. She also said cropped jackets are a good way to elongate the body since the cut is shorter. Pointy heels help give a smaller women some height and also can make her look thinner.

Tall: Taller women can pull off skinny jeans, Meyer said. Wearing dresses on top of jeans works with women who are taller because it does not create a baggy look for them. She said if taller women do wear dresses the length should be to the knee or below. Women who are taller should try to wear rounded-toe heels because it helps them look a bit shorter, she said.

Curvy: Women with curves, Meyer said, should try to wear V-neck tops because it shows some skin and still looks nice. Wrap tops with a camisole on the bottom are good because they create a more slimming look on the torso or waist area. Meyer said boot-cut jeans are ideal for women who are curvy because it creates a slimming look. Also, high-rise jeans work well for more curvy women because they help keep the sides of your body from sticking out, Meyer said.

Hourglass body: Wide-leg jeans are nice because they take away from the hip area and make it more proportional, Meyer said. Since people with hourglass figures are smaller on bottom, babydoll tops are nice because they hide the stomach area and emphasize the smaller top of your body, she said. Meyer also said empire waist shirts are nice for hourglass figures. Meyer said a strapless dress is nice because it also shows off the small top of the body and does not enhance the bottom half, Meyer said.

Meyer said belts are in style right now, but she also said she warns women that they should be careful how they wear them. Belt placement should depend on a woman's torso or bust size.

Meyer said women should wear a belt on their waist if they have a long torso because it makes the rest of the body look proportional. If women have a larger bust, belts under the bust line do not work because it will make the area look larger, she said.

Bonnie Bailey, sophomore in apparel and textiles, said leggings are popular but might look better on taller women because most leggings hit mid-calf.

"A lot of people with different body styles can pull leggings off, you just have to know when to wear them and what to wear them with," Bailey said.

Lindsay Berry, Krystallos Inc. employee, said tunics, empire waist tops and shirt dresses are among the popular items at Krystallos.

Berry, sophomore in pre-professional elementary education, said there are many items that create more slimming looks, but shoppers have to try them on to see if they look right and feel comfortable on their body types.

"It is important for women to find clothes that complement their body shape because, not only will the clothes fit, but women will feel better about themselves if the clothing fits right," she said.

Sex and the City: The Little Apple

Lighter attitude toward dating could lower stress, open avenues for other interests, needs

I weigh 113 pounds, and I'm on a diet — a relationship diet.

Yep, just short of my designated weight class, I plan to skinny up with any other self-indulged women of Manhattan and show this campus that I am one singular sensation.

And singletons of the Little Apple, we truly aren't alone.

According to a recent U.S. Census Bureau report, more than half — 51 percent — of men and women live without a wife or husband, freeing themselves from over-the-top relationship drama and fights about who eats the best junk food in the cupboard.

Yet, among the halls of our purple-clad university, I can't help but feel cheated. As a single woman among K-State's 23,000, it's hard not to catch the glimpse of someone's affection to another. A kiss, a handhold — sometimes I just want to vomit.

Not that my anti-significant other tactics get the best of me, but a lot of people put vigor behind the sport of relationships. And it seems like the game might end before they can reach the pom-pom glory of their boy-meets-girl half-time show.

Dating dieting is the new Zone of 2008, where being single is as lusty as strappy Michael Antonio stilettos — and where having a boyfriend is truly the fad of relationships' past.

Though many 20 year olds prefer to tie themselves down with a relationship and hope for one endearing happily ever after, it's equally important to be comfortable with yourself beyond the boyfriends.

This new year is about erasing stigma behind being single and embracing the freedom of the sexually explorative time known as your 20s. By accepting your single self, you're likely to appreciate more of what you have to offer — to the world, not to one person.

No man or woman should tie anyone down in this carefree time of our lives. We shouldn't have to stress about being the perfect homemaker or saying the perfect "I love you." Among our work, club meetings and 12-credit hour lives, we have enough anxiety to make the grade. Will a high relationship rating satisfy our goals much more?

To live a college life without pressure might seem impossible, but it's quite attainable when it comes to relationships. This year, think more about pleasing yourself rather than someone else. Someone should care about you, and if you're not going to do it, nobody else will.

As a resolution to lighten my relationship load for 2008, I plan to strap onto the dating scene with a lighter attitude, a lighter load and a lighter heart. It's important to take only what you can handle, whether it's something behind the books or between the sheets. By lightening my relationship load, I might just enlighten myself to finding that perfect something I need this year — relationship or not. And for just about anyone, a carb-light, men-light world might be the right step to satisfaction.

The Little Mermaid show performs in Manhattan

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When people think of "The Little Mermaid," they probably don't picture a cowboy starfish, an arrogant Prince Charming and a herd of kindergartners dressed as seahorses.

But the Manhattan Arts Center production of "The Little Mermaid" broke all the rules with its cast of Manhattan area children ages 5 to 18.

The Missoula Children's Theatre presented the show along with the MACademy Youth Theatre, according to the show's program. The Missoula Children's Theatre conducted auditions for the show in Manhattan one week prior to the performance on Saturday, said J.D. Henriksen, Missoula Children's Theatre director.

"The goal isn't to teach theater," Henriksen said. "It's to teach life lessons through theater."

The Missoula Children's Theatre has taken its show to 1,200 communities in all 50 states, to two Canadian provinces and to 16 different countries. More than 65,000 young people have participated as performers in the theater, according to the show's program.

"The Little Mermaid" production in Manhattan put a twist on the usual story of Ariel and her Prince Charming. In this version, a mer-man, played by Henriksen, lets his four lovely daughters visit "the world above" on their 16th birthdays. The youngest daughter, Celia, played by Ada Davis-Nouri, falls in love with the arrogant Prince Perfect [as do her sisters] on her trip to the human world. But her "Flounder"-like friend, Gil, played by Jack Hubler-Dayton, is vying for her attention in the water-world.

Oblivious to Gil's crush on her, Celia asks the cowboy starfish to give her legs so she can dance at the Prince's party and win his heart. But when the Prince picks her to be his bride and suggests they celebrate with a fish fry, Celia returns to her family's welcoming arms.

The children's roles ranged from 5-year-old seahorses, to town criers, to a dragon named by six kids, to potential princesses for Prince Perfect. Iridescent fabric and cool colors turned the stage into a home for mer-people.

Rachel Gorman, sophomore at Manhattan High School, played one of Celia's sisters. She said being in the show with her friends was great overall, and she is always looking for new opportunities to act. Gorman said she enjoys working with young casts, and has had experience acting with the Christian Youth Theater in Kansas City, Kan.

"Musicals with little kids are just so fun," she said. "Little kids are really free and you can just goof around and not worry about expectations."

Uwe Thumm, an audience member and father of two cast members, said the show was well done, well choreographed, and had nice costumes.

"[The directors] made sure the kids were exposed," he said. "It wasn't dominated by adult actors; it was nice guidance."

Henriksen said he loves directing kids who have never been on stage.

Students help to raise funds for university, own colleges through Telefund for 28 years

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sunday marked the start of the 28th-annual K-State Telefund — a university-wide campaign that collects donations from alumni to benefit each academic college.

Since its start in 1980, Telefund has raised more than $21 million for the university. Student volunteers now work the phone lines with hopes of winning several prizes, which have included cars, electric scooters and more than $2,000 in scholarships in previous years.

The following article is from the Feb. 21, 1980, Collegian. Read on and find out more about the first Telefund.

KSU COLLEGES LOOK FOR FUNDS WITH NATIONWIDE TELEFUND DRIVE

By Janice Snyder

Thirty thousand alumni will be contacted in March and April as the Colleges of Agriculture, Engineering and Arts and Sciences conduct "Telefund," a telephone campaign to raise money for the individual colleges.

A goal of $25,000 per college has been set for the Telefund campaigns. Between 300 and 500 K-State students will contact alumni throughout the United States.

The College of Agriculture Telefund will begin March 30 and end April 14, while the College of Engineering Telefund will be April 15-28. The College of Arts and Sciences Telefund will be conducted each weekend in April.

In recent years universities have needed more private support because state appropriations and student fees are not enough for the extras of education, said Mark Moore, director of giving for the KSU Foundation.

Telefund will try to make up for the discrepancy and help provide scholarships, laboratory and classroom equipment and more income for student activities, Moore said. He also said the main emphasis will be on scholarships.

This year the event is going national. In the past the fund-raising has been limited to Riley County, said David Mugler, associate dean for the College of Agriculture and chairman of the agriculture Telefund.

Moore said a successful mailing campaign was utilized last fall.

"In November, we put together a mailing campaign,"

Moore said. "We got together with the deans in each college and put together individual mailings to send to alumni to show what was taking place in each college and ask for contributions."

Moore said Telefund is different from past university fund-raising events, which were directed toward all alumni. This fundraiser is aimed at alumni from specific colleges who have never contributed.

"The best way to get in touch with them is to call and talk with them," he said. "In this sense both the caller and the alumni will have something in common — their college."

Telefund will last for three hours each night using the university's watt line. Students, faculty and area alumni volunteers will man 15 phones in the K-State Student Union. Each caller will contact 25 to 30 alumni a night.

The callers will be given a sample conversation, information pertaining to their college and pledge cards. Moore said students employed by the work study program are now in the process of going through phone books from other cities in the United States to look up alumni.

However, they have found most of the alumni are still in Kansas, Moore said.

Presently, chairs of the colleges are coordinating the teams and looking for student captains, Moore said. The student captains will be responsible partly to recruit volunteers and make sure they show up.

He added the volunteer callers have a chance to win prizes. Expense-pair weekends to Worlds of Fun, Tiffany's Attic and Crown Center in Kansas City, Mo., will be given to those callers with the most pledges. Dinner passes to local restaurants also will be awarded.

Students employed under K-State's work-study program spent more than 200 hours looking up 15,000 Kansas telephone numbers for the first Telefund.

POKER | Lesser-known sport amuses crowd

were still anxiously trying to see what was happening.

Clowns moved in to distract the bull and Schreiner was able to make it safely to the rail after several seconds. He said he was a little sore, but otherwise uninjured and planning to return to the event next year.

Diane Cornelison, also from Frankfort, said her husband, Jim, was one of the contestants at the table. She said she had never seen cowboy poker before and didn't know what to expect.

"I was scared to death because I thought they were going to bring out a sheep again," she said. "I didn't know they were going to bring out a real bull. I don't think the guys had any idea either."

Lensi LaForge of Independence, Kan., said cowboy poker was new to her as well. She said she felt terrible for Schreiner as he was being attacked, and wouldn't have been watching if a significant other were at that table.

"I'd be mad at him for doing it," she said. "I think it's crazy, and I don't understand why they do it."

MANAGER | Assistant served in Des Moines

She also served as management assistant to the city of Des Moines from July 2005-January 2006, and she has been a presenter and participant at the International City/County Management Association Annual Conferences and at the Association of Government Accountants.

Hilgers said at the time of recruitment, the city manager's office decided to hire another assistant city manager instead of a deputy city manager because the assistant city manager position allows for possible promotion.

"We've been short of that assistance in the last several months, and she'll definitely fill a void in that area," Hilgers said.

Though Des Moines has about four times the population of Manhattan, Palmer said the same management principles apply within both cities.

"Manhattan is a little smaller community and a different community in a lot of respects, but they are similar," Palmer said. "I think the issues of providing municipal services are the same."

RECRUIT | Students enjoy atmosphere

Open House, Parrott said. These events, unlike Formal Recruitment, follow no required timeline or dress. Various movie nights, game nights or other events with the sororities allow prospective members to see what the chapters are really like, she said.

The houses then decide as a whole if they want to give individual prospective members bids, and the potential members can receive bids at any time. The girls can go to multiple chapters' events, but only accept one bid, Parrott said.

Some prospective members enjoyed and benefited from the relaxed Open House atmosphere.

"I'm a transfer student and coming after everyone already has their groups of friends established," said Krista Bennett, sophomore majoring in psychology. "Spring Recruitment is allowing me to get involved with the Greek Community early. There seems to be so much fun and so much community in this Greek system, and I can't wait to get involved and meet new people."

Greek Affairs is hoping the outcome of this year's Spring Recruitment will be a positive one, Parrott said.

being offensively."

Oklahoma State stayed in reasonable distance of the Wildcats, coming within two points just after K-State's run. Holding a slim 64-60 lead with 57 seconds left, K-State was able to stop the Cowgirls from scoring, defending on four shot opportunities in 36 seconds and, with two free throws from Dietz, went ahead 66-60.

Oklahoma State sophomore guard Andrea Riley kept the Cowgirls alive by draining a three-point basket with 11 seconds remaining. Riley led the Cowgirls with 34 points and was the only player for Oklahoma State in double-figures.

"Riley is obviously just an unbelievable talent and her ability to score one-on-one, her quickness and her ability to get to the rim is extraordinary," Patterson said.

Without Dietz's production in the first half, K-State got help from junior forward Marlies Gipson, who put up 10 points and six rebounds in the first half. Gipson finished with a double-double, putting up 21 points and pulling down 16 rebounds.

"When Gipson ends the game with 16 rebounds ... there are just no words to describe the effort that she gave in an attempt to win this basketball game, and I think you say the same thing about Dietz in the second half," Patterson said.

Despite Gipson's strong performance, K-State was out-rebounded 52-30. Oklahoma State coach Kurt Budke said there were too many wasted opportunities by the Cowgirls, especially after getting offensive rebounds.

"We almost had more offensive rebounds than they had total rebounds, so we didn't take advantage of our second chances," he said.

Lehning had 13 points and sophomore forward Ashley Sweat scored 12.

$ignificant earnings Students donate plasma to make cash, help others

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Durand Reeves said the first time he donated plasma he was nervous because of the fear of pain.

"I'm not good with needles," Reeves, sophomore in pre-journalism said, "But I got over it quick because of the money."

Reeves is not the only student who has had the false preconception that donating plasma is painful, said Kimberly Agwu, junior in pre-nursing and phlebotomist at ZLB Plasma Services in Manhattan.

"It doesn't hurt at all," Agwu said. "The only thing is whether or not you are afraid of needles." And for those still intimidated by needles, the cash incentive might be of some comfort, like Reeves said it was for him.

For donating plasma, students can earn $40 their first time and the same amount for their second donation — if they come back within 7 days, Agwu said.

"Last semester, I went every couple days," Reeves said. "The first time takes a long time, but now it's pretty smooth. I get out of there in about an hour."

Agwu said she sees several students every day coming in to donate plasma to make money. She also said most students are not aware of what plasma is and who it can benefit.

According to the BioLife Web site, a licensed donating center that leads in the collections of high-quality plasma, donated plasma is used in the treatment of serious disorders like hemophilia and immune-system defi-

IN ORDER TO DONATE PLASMA, YOU MUST MEET THE FOLLOWING CRITERIA:

AGE: Minimum 18 years. Maximum 65 years.

WEIGHT: At least 110 pounds

IDENTIFICATION: You must provide one or more forms of identification that includes the following information: a photo, a signature, date of birth, and social-security number. Some examples of acceptable identification would be: social-security card, driver's license, valid passport, certified birth certificate, ID card issued by a government agency or other entity (e.g., U.S. military ID card, school, employment, state, etc.), or permanent residence card issued by CIS.

ADDRESS: You must provide proof of a permanent local address within the donor recruitment area of the facility in which you would like to donate. This proof can be in the form of a current and valid driver's license listing your physical address, a signed lease agreement between you and your current landlord, or a utility bill or other items mailed through the United States Postal Service (USPS), so long as the postmark is dated within the last 60 days. "Exception to the donor recruitment area is as follows: College students and military personnel and donors participating in a specific antibody collection program (e.g., red-blood-cell donor or recipient).

GOOD HEALTH: You must be in good health and feel well the day you present to donate.

DIET/NUTRITION: Proper food and adequate fluid intake are essential for a successful donation. For additional information in regard to diet and nutrition, please see the BioLife Web page at www.biolifeplasma.com/en/plasma-learning-center/wellness.html or request a copy of a BioLife Nutrition Brochure at your local BioLife Plasma Services Facility.

ciencies and to make products used to help treat and prevent diseases like tetanus, rabies, measles, rubella and hepatitis B. In addition, hospitals and emergency rooms all over the world use plasma-derived albumin in the treatment of traumatic injuries like shock and severe burns.

Agwu said donating plasma can cause only minimal side effects.

"If you donate a lot, scar tissue can occur, but this isn't necessarily bad," she said, "It's just a part of the healing process."

According to the BioLife Web site, to donate, a person must be at least 18 years old and weigh at least 110 pounds. There also are individuals who might not be eligible because of factors like pregnancy, a recent tattoo or blood transfusion.

Cynthia Tamboue, junior in chemistry and plasma services phlebotomist, said there are tests people go through before they can donate.

"The reason why the first time takes so long is because we give a complete physical to make sure the person is able to donate," Tamboue said.

Tamboue said people interested in giving plasma should come prepared, and the process will go quicker.

"If you come in hydrated and eat healthy prior to coming in, it's only going to be long the first time," she said. "Every time after should only take about 45 minutes if you come in prepared."

Tamboue said people need to make sure they drink plenty of water at least 12 to 24 hours before coming in. She also said it is necessary to eat a healthy meal that is low in fat.

"If you eat a meal too high in fat, we will be able to see it in your plasma, and you won't be able to donate," she said.

Tamboue said students who donate plasma typically do so for financial benefit.

"We pay you to basically sit

Woman allegedly raped

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An 18-year-old woman reported being forcibly raped during the early morning hours Sunday in northwest Manhattan, according to a Riley County Police report.

RCPD Capt. Hank Nelson said the suspect in the alleged rape was unknown to the victim. Nelson said the rape does not appear to be related to other rapes in the area.

No arrests have been made.

Cloned meat approved for sale

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Federal Food and Drug Administration approved the sale of meat from cloned animals on Jan. 18, but grocery stores probably will not be selling it for up to a few years.

The meat — whenever it hits store shelves — will not be labeled as being cloned.

The FDA stated cloned meat is no different than meat from traditionally raised animals, but the Department of Agriculture urged vendors to wait to sell the meat for several reasons, including consumer fear of the product.

One reason meat from cloned animals is not yet a viable market option is that several large food companies like Tyson Foods Inc. and Smithfield Foods Inc. have said they will not carry cloned meat because customers are still hesitant with the cloning process, said Sean Fox, professor of agricultural economics.

Fox also said the process is not marketable at its current cost.

"Cloning is still a very expensive process," he said. "If it is used, it will be for highly specialized purposes."

Randall Prather, professor of animal sciences at the University of Missouri-Columbia, said cloning is still inefficient, and some abnormal clones are still processed, but they are identified early and are not be used for reproduction or for any products like meat or milk.

Prather also said meat from initial clones would not enter the market because slaughtering the original clones for meat would defeat the whole process.

"There are very few animals that will enter the food chain immediately," Prather said. "It will be the offspring of clones that will have a larger impact on the market."

Another impediment is the high cost of the cloning process, Prather said.

"Because it takes a lot of time, it's very inefficient, and you have to set up a large lab," he said. "It's not something you can do at the kitchen table."

Prather said people should not have hesitations when it comes to cloned meat because the process is no different than treating a cow so it will produce better milk, which is common in stores everywhere.

"That's the whole point," Prather said. "If you can't tell, what difference does it make?"

Union Holocaust display educates visitors

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students got an up-close and personal look at more than 1,000 Jewish names of those saved during the Holocaust by German industrialist Oskar Schindler.

Visitors at the William T. Kemper Art Gallery in the K-State Student Union Tuesday night enjoyed a short reception while viewing the traveling exhibit dedicated to the life of Schindler.

Consisting of five accordion-style display boards, the exhibit gave a timeline of Schindler's life.

The exhibit, brought in by the Union Program Council and organized by the United States Holocaust Memorial, has been in the art gallery since Dec. 21 and will be removed Friday.

The boards explained Schindler's involvement with the German Schutzstaffel, his rise to power as a businessman and his transformation to Jewish hero.

Schindler, who became wealthy exploiting Jewish slave labor, had a change of heart after walking through a Jewish work camp. After seeing what the Nazis were doing to the Jews, Schindler set up a barracks at one of his factories for his Jewish workers to live in.

The displays had pictures, a short biography and a copy of the lists of Jewish names Schindler had saved.

After the hour-long reception at the gallery, the movie "Schindler's List" was shown in the Flint Hills room in the Union.

Caitlin Burns, sophomore in graphic design and Spanish and co-chairwoman for the UPC arts committee, said they brought the exhibit to campus to better educate the student body about the Holocaust.

"We decided it seemed like a really great exhibit for the students on campus to see and get to know a little more about it," Burns said.

Even students who were already well versed in the history of the Holocaust found the display interesting and educational.

Tracy Tucker, senior in English, said she took a course about Holocaust literature last semester and what she saw at the exhibit interested her.

"It was really cool to see,"

Tucker said. "Seeing the actual papers [list] was cool too."

Tucker said it is difficult for her to be shocked by images and stories related to the Holocaust but called the exhibit powerful.

Students are asked to donate in blood drive

By Jenna Scavuzzo
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students are given the opportunity to save at least three lives each January.

In celebration of the thousands of lives rescued each year by blood-donor volunteers, the American Red Cross is sponsoring National Volunteer Blood Donor Month during February by recognizing donors while also educating the public on the need for blood.

The organization is encouraging K-State students to realize the importance of donating and attend the four campus blood drives this month because blood supplies often are at their lowest levels in January.

"Students should donate blood this month because it is one of the easiest ways to give back to the community," said Norma Dixon, communications manager of the American Red Cross.

Students who donate should get a mini-health exam, check their blood pressure and pulse and make sure they are feeling healthy the day of the donation, Dixon said.

Each donation of one pint

HOW TO DONATE

Help save a life this January by giving blood from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday at Bosco Plaza or 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Wednesday in front of Boyd Hall.

Everyone who comes in to donate at the January blood drive will have a chance to win one of four $25 Visa gift cards.

You can find more information at www.bloodgiveslife.org or call 800-448-3543 to make your appointment.

of blood helps saves the lives of three hospital patients, said Kristi Ingalls, donor recruitment representative for the American Red Cross.

Each year, the American Red Cross makes a goal to collect a total of 1,880 pints of blood from all four campus drives, and it is exceedingly rare to not make this goal, Ingalls said.

"If just 1,880 pints of blood are donated — and we usually end up with more — 5,640 hospital patients are saved," Ingalls said. "It is such a huge gift that these donors volunteer their time to help people they don't even know."

honors these volunteers through sharing the grateful recovery stories of the blood recipients with the donors.

The American Red Cross also is working to educate the public on the vitality of giving blood this month, hoping publicizing its cause will encourage others to donate.

Its local representatives have been speaking to various groups and organizations at K-State on the importance of giving blood, Dixon said. American Red Cross' Web site, www.bloodgiveslife.org, also aims to educate future donors on the vitality of donating by providing information, statistics and survivor stories, she said.

Despite its immense cause, many do not already give blood because there are negative myths associated with blood donation, Dixon said. Many are also uninformed about the cause and do not grasp the importance of giving blood, she said.

"A lot of people think it's going to hurt or be invasive," Dixon said. "Donating blood is a very simple process — the actual donation is only 10 minutes long. It's very easy, and I wish more people would give it a chance."

The process of donating blood is set up into three simple steps, Dixon said.

The donor signs up and shows up with a picture ID, goes through a health-history questionnaire and donates blood for 10 minutes. The volunteer is given water and snacks to begin the replenishing process.

In order to donate, the volunteer must fit three general guidelines, Dixon said. The donor should weigh 110 pounds or more, be in general good health and be at least 17 years old. In Kansas, however, a volunteer is allowed to donate at age 16 with parental consent.

Some K-State students who have donated in the past are passionate about the importance of the cause they have contributed to.

"Donating really helps out the community," said Matt Vernon, sophomore in history. "Others should give blood because there are a lot of people out there that have different blood types, and you never know when an emergency will occur. I was only there for 30 minutes, and I saved lives in those 30 minutes I was there."

City to hear 2008 budget, discuss revenue sources

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan City Commission will review the 2008 budget proposal and ethics policies update tonight at City Hall.

Bernie Hayen, director of finance in Manhattan, will give a presentation on the city budget for 2008 and some items for 2009, according to the city council agenda.

"This Tuesday is just a study session," said Jason Hilgers, assistant city manager. "They walk through the revenue sources in the city."

Brian Williams, management assistant in the city manager's office, will present updates to the ethics policy plan the city has been working on. The proposed principles include transparency, integrity, quality, stewardship, fairness and equity, according to the agenda.

"It has been proposed [that there be two policies]; one for city staff, but also [one for] elected officials," Hilgers said.

The city typically holds work sessions on the second and fourth Tuesday of each month.

Since January has five Tuesdays, officials did not meet on the first Tuesday, moving the work sessions back a week, Hilgers said.

The meeting will be at 5 tonight at City Hall.

Celebrate the past

Historical events should not be disregarded, forgotten

In classrooms and homes, on campuses and newsstands, the story of our past is disappearing. At a time when citizens have access to more information than any time in history, people are exhibiting less of a grasp on just that: our history.

JOE VOSSEN

The celebration of our American past seems to be dying as numbers roll in depicting our society's historical illiteracy. One 2006 study by the Inter-College Studies Institute administered a 60-question general U.S. history exam to 14,000 college freshmen. They averaged an F.

What is eroding our national memory? The problem lies in the way history is taught. Many courses are exercises in memorization of dates, names and places. Instructors do not sufficiently encourage the closer study of the colorful characters and incredible events that make our past a rich subject.

As historian David McCullough, author of the Pulitzer Prize-winning presidential biographies "Truman" and "John Adams," said, "If it's made a matter of dates and memorization of obscure provisions and ancient treaties, if it's made boring, if it's made dull, how can you blame anyone for turning away from it?"

So what approach should our educators use? Teachers should make history come alive through storytelling. They should bring history to life by painting a picture of events and people on a more emotional level — not just as cold, static facts in a textbook.

No tale is as fascinating as the American pageant, said Charles Sanders, associate professor of history.

"I approach American history as a story," Sanders said. "It's a great story, full of drama, humor, sadness, joy, excitement — the whole range of human emotions." In his classroom, Sanders said he approaches the subject by urging students to "capture not only the facts of history, but the feel as well."

Too many of us view history as we do chemistry or math: the facts are fixed, and the results only come out one way. But no event in our history was preordained. The best history teachers are the ones who emphasize this. They raise interest in the subject, and their students critically evaluate and retain information. They make students ask, "Why did this happen? How were they feeling?"

Consider if the Revolutionary War had been lost. Imagine that Rosa Parks had not defiantly stayed seated on that Montgomery, Ala., bus in 1955.

Our past was shaped by people who are little different than we are, but who were placed in a position that enabled them to change the trajectory of America. When students realize that our most famous (and infamous) figures were ordinary people with real fears and hopes, they become more interested; and raising interest is the answer to reviving the celebration of our history.

History can be more fascinating than any movie, TV show or video game. We must admit, however, it is in direct competition with those media for our attention.

Luckily, Sanders said, history is not only entertaining but thought-provoking when it is, "that sort which historian Bruce Catton has described as 'history with the blood in it.'"

We cannot allow our history — the glaring failures or incredible successes — to be pushed aside. How can we deny ourselves this lens?

It can bring our present and future into perspective. An appreciation of history builds better citizens and gives us a fresh outlook on the problems of the present, and the whole history of this continent and its people should be learned because it is fun.

It is an exploration into centuries of struggle and debate that define our shared experience as diverse citizens of the United States.

It is a story that might make us embarrassed or proud, worried or hopeful, but it is our story. We should never forget it.

Media spotlight should focus on relevant issues

Information is important. Wars have been fought over the free flow of information, to stop destructive information and because of unnecessary information.

TYLER SMITH

The reason students go to school is to acquire information about something that someone will later pay them to use. The articles in this newspaper are filled with it — some readers might know, and some might not.

With this endless and ever-changing flow of data, it is almost impossible to be well-informed on multiple issues. This fact, coupled with the dazzling display of media coverage and commentary every time a presidential candidate does something — does anything — is making it impossible.

Every news network, late show and piece of satire is pushing out opinions like they're getting commission. Everyone is dissecting the smallest aspects of everyone else's campaign. If a candidate sneezes now, the media compares it to Pompeii. If another says "bless you," then they've just declared open war.

The 2008 electoral coverage needs to slow down. With TV and the Internet so saturated with it, it's almost impossible to get away from. Without a doubt, people should be informed on the issues and values of candidates — that is not the point. The point is, the issues should be discussed, not what candidates are buying at the grocery store.

For example, I know Sylvester Stallone is supporting presidential candidate Sen. John McCain in the 2008 election.

I found this little gem through the idiot factory known as FoxNews.com. Why would I ever care who Rocky wants for president? How is this remotely relevant? It's not like he's Bruce Springsteen or anything.

How can we focus on the important things with all of this going on? The mudslinging on TV has reached a level never seen before, and what's worse, it's not even between the candidates. It is from Chris Matthews and Bill O'Reilly, Jon Stewart and Steven Colbert and a thousand people in the middle. There is so much backseat driving going on, who knows where we'll end up.

In the past — even 20 years ago — this couldn't have happened. A newspaper can't yell at you. But in this new age where almost any information is accessible at lightning speed, how much is too much?

Where should we draw the line on this barrage of social commentary? With the constant growth of technology and communication, it can only get more intense. But for now at least, we need to put a damper on all the unnecessary information.

Donating blood, plasma great ways to give, receive

Donating blood through the American Red Cross can save lives. But donating plasma can save lives too — with the incentive of monetary payment.

Though some students donate blood to give back to their communities, students who donate plasma feel the same way about their donations.

In light of January being National Blood Donor Month, some might donate for more specific reasons, for example, a shortage of blood in their ethnic community. Or simply giving the gift of life to a victim who experiences extreme blood loss because of an accident.

Some also might choose to donate blood because it is a much quicker process than donating plasma. Donating plasma can take up to four hours the first time and around an hour on the following visits, while donating blood can take less than 10 minutes.

However, with the prices of tuition and gas continuing to rise, college students are turning to plasma banks when looking for quick cash.

Agencies like the American Red Cross are facing competition from for-profit blood plasma collection centers, which pay donors an average of $9 to $20 per donation.

For-profit centers began targeting college students in the late 1970s, and it is a strategy that research suggests still works today.

An Ohio University study of 411 college students ages 18 to 22 found 10 percent of students have sold their blood plasma to a for-profit collection agency at least once. In that group, three out of five are former Red Cross donors who stopped donating blood when they started selling their plasma.

The American Red Cross tried different ways of attracting college students like raffling off Apple iPod Nanos and $1,000 scholarships to students who donate.

They are even advertising on popular networking sites like Myspace.com and Facebook.com. Many states, including Kansas, have dropped their donor age to 16.

So what is a poor college student to do? Donate blood when you can. There is usually a blood drive only once a semester, and in the meantime, you could get paid for donating plasma to a good cause.

Hygiene hints

Healthy personal habits more than daily routine

By Ryne Witt
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hygiene probably is not something that crosses college students' minds every day, but it is something they probably deal with by showering and brushing their teeth daily. Here are some tips that might help improve basic hygiene and make life more pleasurable for everyone.

TEETH

Plaque is the bacteria that causes cavities. According to healthyteeth.org, it is the only bacteria in the mouth that causes cavities.

The site also points out a diet heavy in sugar is harmful, because plaque uses sugar as a form of energy. So, the more sugar a person eats, the more plaque they will have on their teeth.

Solutions to this plaque problem are regular trips to the dentist and brushing and flossing teeth twice daily, for at least two and half to three minutes, according to the site. Also, the Web site said people need to keep a healthy diet because it will help in avoiding sugary foods.

Something students might not know about alcoholic beverages is what they can do to their teeth.

"Drinking alcohol will have a similar effect on your teeth as drinking a soda," said Theresa Doyle, health educator at Lafene Health Center. "Both [drinks] have sugar that could build up and cause cavities."

This includes beer, not just cocktail drinks or wine, though those drinks can be worse because they add acidity to the problem, according to lifetips.com.

The site provides tips on how to help a person who isn't focused on keeping their pearly whites clean. Leave the toothbrush on the pillow as a friendly reminder that it is time for a teeth brushing. Chew sugarless gum or swish water between drinks, because it will help increase saliva flow, rinse away sugars

WHAT YOU DIDN'T KNOW ABOUT HYGIENE

1. The human body is home to some 1,000 species of bacteria. There are more germs on one body than people in the United States.

2. Antibacterial soap is no more effective at preventing infection than regular soap, and triclosan (the active ingredient) can affect human sex hormones.

3. There's no "five-second rule" when it comes to dropping food on the ground. Bacteria need no time at all to contaminate food.

4. Soap gets its name from the mythological Mount Sapo. Fat and wood ash from animal sacrifices there washed into the Tiber River, creating a rudimentary cleaning agent that aided women doing their washing.

5. A seventh grader in Florida recently won her school science fair by proving there are more bacteria in ice machines at fast-food restaurants than in toilet-bowl water.

6. A study of more than 11,000 children determined that an overly hygienic environment increases the risk of eczema and asthma.

7. The first true toothbrush, consisting of Siberian pig hair bristles wired into carved cattle-bone handles, was invented in China in 1498. But teeth brushing didn't become routine in the United States until it was enforced on soldiers during World War II.

8. University of Arizona researchers determined that TV remotes are the worst carriers of bacteria in hospital rooms, worse even than toilet handles. Remotes spread antibiotic-resistant Staphylococcus, which contributes to the 90,000 annual deaths from infection acquired in hospitals.

— Discovery Magazine and decrease the latent acid in the mouth.

FACE/SKIN

Keeping skin healthy and clean is one way for a person to maintain high a self-esteem, positive mental attitude and strong self-confidence according to skin-care-tips-from-dermatologist.com.

The Web site offers many tips to keep faces from getting too oily and full of acne. People should have a balanced diet, stay hydrated by drinking eight to 10 glasses of water or juice a day, exercise, get at least seven to eight hours of sleep, manage stress, and avoid alcohol and drugs.

But, according to Doyle, there is part of our skin that students forget about: their hands.

"One important aspect of hygiene that may get neglected is hand-washing," she said. "Hand-washing is essential for preventing the spread of germs and bacteria. Another way to help keep germs at bay is to cough in your sleeve."

Many people sneeze or cough in their hands, and proceed to open doors, use shared computers, and touch a variety of surfaces without washing their hands first, which spreads germs.

SHOWERING/HAIR

For people in the United States, showering sounds basic, and most people do it daily, but Doyle said the number of times a person showers per week is actually a cultural thing. Some cultures shower every day and others shower once per week.

She also said college students usually shower every day out of habit, and because they don't want people to think they smell.

When hair doesn't get washed, it collects oil and dirt. According to Lynne Chapman, editor of hair at BellaOnline.com, people should wash their hair only as often as necessary.

"If a person's hair looks good on the second day and doesn't feel dirty, there is no reason to wash it," she said.

She also said younger people usually don't take care of their hair as well as older people.

"Younger bodies naturally produce stronger hair," she said. "Younger people tend to use more hair color and do more work with appliances such as a flat iron because they haven't seen any ill effects — yet."

"Older people have often learned from experience what causes damage to their hair. The hair naturally starts to lose elasticity and strength as we age, so older people are doing more to take care of what they have."

The "Juno" soundtrack is about as charming as the movie. It's mix-tape feel croons of young love, friendships and general teen angst.

Most people who pay attention to mainstream entertainment know "Juno" is about a 16-year-old girl named Juno (aka Junebug), who unexpectedly gets pregnant with her high-school best friend. Surprisingly, neither the movie nor soundtrack are depressing, despite the sobering subject.

In many scenes, the music couldn't fit the characters and moods better. For example, during the description of Juno's boyfriend, who is an accomplished track runner, the song "A Well Respected Man" by The Kinks plays. Or when the catchy, toe-tapping "All I Want Is You" by Barry Louis Polisar accompanies the film, surely audience members share a collective sigh of "aw." With lyrics like the following: "If I was a flower growing wild and free/All I'd want is you to be my sweet honey bee/And if I was a tree growing tall and green/All I'd want is you to shade me and be my leaves," how could they resist?

Ellen Page, the actress who portrayed Juno, apparently helped out with the soundtrack. In a media interview, director Jason Reitman expressed how much input and inspiration Page had with the movie and music.

"At one point, I asked Ellen Page before we started shooting, 'what do you think Juno listens to?' And she said 'The Moldy Peaches.' She went on my computer, played the songs, and I fell in love with it," Reitman said in the interview. "I got in touch with Kimya Dawson of The Moldy Peaches, and she started sending me her work, which was beautiful, and that became a lot of the soundtrack."

Dawson, singer/songwriter of The Moldy Peaches, brings an appropriate element to the compilation. She has a light, juvenile-sounding voice. Her songs "Loose Lips," "Tire Swing," "Sleep" and "So Nice So Smart" sound like they're coming directly from the mind of a teenager.

"You're so nice, and you're so smart/You're such a good friend I hafta break your heart./Tell you that I love you/then I'll tear your world apart," Dawson sings in "So Nice So Smart."

Alongside the sweet love songs and humorous lyrics relating to young life, the soundtrack also provides ample older music that allows different generations to relate. These bands include The Velvet Underground, Buddy Holly and Sonic Youth.

As if the movie wasn't appealing enough, the soundtrack is catchy and impelling and much better than anything else released on CD so far this year.

MySpace, Facebook users must use caution when dealing with potential online predators

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For many, MySpace.com is an online forum used to meet people and keep in touch with old friends. There are, however, those who use the site for a much different purpose.

Because of the easy accessibility of users, some exploit the Web site to prey on children and young adults, taking advantage of the easy access to many potential victims.

Users are allowed to set up profiles under almost any name, and these can be set up to give the illusion the user is actually someone else. Often, these are the profiles used to play pranks and stalk underage users.

To combat the overwhelming amount of misuse in its site, MySpace has agreed to institute more than 60 changes in the site to make it safer for all users.

MySpace worked with attorney generals from 49 states and also the District of Columbia to make the changes.

Kansas Attorney General Paul Morrison was among those who supported the agreement.

"[Morrison] felt the large amount of anonymity on the site combined with few restrictions were a recipe for disaster," said Ashley Anstaett, spokeswoman for Morrison.

Anstaett said the agreement reached is not a law and is not binding at all.

"If [MySpace employees] don't follow what they said they would follow, states could seek legal resolution," said Anstaett.

Among the changes agreed upon include the creation of a new high school only site that will be much more restrictive about the users it allows in, Anstaett said.

Many of the new measures are aimed at making signing up harder if a user is underage as well as making sure the content on the pages of all its users is appropriate for all ages.

Also, parents will be able to submit the e-mail address of their children to a block list, so the children cannot sign up for an account on the site, according to a press release from the Kansas Attorney General's office.

Many of the predators get in contact with the underage children by making comments on the in-profile message boards as well as sending messages, which are more private.

Another problem with the site is the posting of indecent material by users. This abuse is more widespread and therefore affects all users, not just underage users.

Some of the changes were implemented immediately, and MySpace is working on integrating more and more as time goes on.

"I haven't seen any of the changes, but I hope they're working," said Angela Whay, senior in speech communications.

Whay, a registered MySpace user for about a year and a half, said she has never received any messages from men trying to prey upon her, but when she received a message she deemed inappropriate, she reported it.

After reporting the message, Whay said she did not receive any acknowledgment from MySpace about the report.

According to a press release from Morrison's office, the social networking site vowed to respond to all such reports.

Whay also said she has not received an e-mail or any sort of message from MySpace as to what the changes will entail, but she did say she gets some information from a scrolling message box on her homepage.

The only state that did not sign on was Texas, and no one from the Texas attorney general's office could be reached for comment.

help keep you cold-free. In addition to preventing sickness, exercise also can make you feel better when you are already sick. Just make sure you stay hydrated and be sure not to over-exert yourself.

If you are going to the Rec and you are sick, make sure you wipe down every machine you touch with the disinfectant, and use the antibacterial hand gel provided in the weight room and at the service area desks. If you want to work out in the Rec and are weary of the sick people around you, then wipe down your machine before you use it, and don't forget about washing your hands, too.

Last but certainly not least, stay hydrated. If you give your body the tools it needs to stay healthy, it won't let you down.

When you start to skimp on things your body needs, that's when you get sick. So follow these tips to keep you healthy and productive during a season of sickness.

down and watch television or read magazines — it's pretty easy," she said.

Division of Biology instructor Dana Townsend said donating plasma could cause a lack of protein.

Plasma contains essential proteins that might be harder for the body to make after a donation, Townsend said.

"This is why they don't let you donate every day," she said. "This is to make sure the body has plenty of time to make new proteins."

Townsend said the proteins hold the fluid in the plasma, and it is important for people to drink liquids after donating.

"If a person goes to a place that rehydrates you, you'll be fine, and the [plasma service] here does," she said. "This one in town is good."

Jonathan Scott, junior in marketing, learned about plasma donation by reading an advertisement in the newspaper.

He said he realized how donating plasma can not only put extra cash in his pocket but also can have a positive affect on his community.

"Of course, there is the money, but it is also good to know you're helping out someone you'll never meet, thanks to giving plasma," Scott said.

STEROIDS | Records, stats should remain

read something like the following:

"During the 10-year period from 1995 to 2005, many players in Major League Baseball used steroids and other performance-enhancing substances. Consequently, this period is forever known as the Steroid Era. Keep this in mind as you turn the following pages, as it is up to you to form your own opinion. All records and statistics are legitimate and fully supported by Major League Baseball."

It is obvious MLB Commissioner Bud Selig turned a blind eye to the issue of steroids in baseball. After the first Congressional investigation, Major League Baseball adopted a new policy that seems to be working. The three-strike policy gets the message to players that there will be no tolerance for using performance-enhancing substances.

Slowly, but surely, baseball is ridding itself of performance-enhancing substances.

The first step was to acknowledge the steroid era. Now, it is time that baseball moves past it. The past is the past. It can't be changed. It can't be fixed. Baseball needs to let it go and celebrate the game for what it is today.

MLB needs to accept steroid era, move on

The decade spanning from 1995 to 2005 is possibly the darkest era in Major League Baseball. During this time, many professional baseball players used performance-enhancing substances like steroids and human-growth hormone to illegally improve their athletic abilities. The results of their usage were mind-boggling. Prior to 1995, there had been 22 occasions when a player hit 50 or more home runs in a season. Since 1995, there have been 23.

Many elite players have been linked to performance-enhancing substances. Barry Bonds and Roger Clemens are two of the most famous players. There has been a public outcry for baseball officials to void their records and statistics from the record books or at least put an asterisk next to their names. However, this is the wrong approach; the records and statistics should stand.

Do I think Barry Bonds used steroids? Of course I do. His weight went from 185 pounds during his rookie season in 1986 to 206 pounds in 1998, to 240 pounds today. He put together possibly the best statistical five-year span by any MLB slugger.

Do I think Roger Clemens used steroids? There is not a doubt in my mind. The man is 45 years old and is still one of the league's most dominant pitchers. He seemed to defy the laws of nature by playing better as he got older.

Now that former Maine Sen. George Mitchell published his findings of performance-enhancing substances in baseball, Congress has decided to conduct its second investigation. What did the first investigation do? Not a whole lot. The MLB stiffened its drug policy, and that's about it. What is the point of investigating again? Congress should spend its time on more pressing issues in our country.

All records should stand, and those users of steroids who qualify should be allowed into the Hall of Fame. Barry Bonds and Roger Clemens are not the only two who might have used steroids. Many players, whose names and faces are long since forgotten, took steroids, human-growth hormone and other substances. Why are baseball officials not going after them? They are avoiding it because it is an almost impossible task to go back and figure out who took what and how games were influenced because their use. It is just too daunting of a task. Instead, baseball should end its witch-hunt and move on.

The first page of the MLB record book should

Scott D. Weaver | K-STATE SPORTS INFORMATION

Junior Scott Sellers completes a jump during the 2006-07 season. Sellers has already qualified for the NCAA tournament this season after placing first in last year's NCAA competition.

K-State jumper has eye on Olympics

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Though he is the reigning NCAA outdoor high-jump champion, junior Scott Sellers is not complacent. While Sellers wants to improve his jumps and defend his national championship, he has his sights set on making the Olympic team.

Qualifying for the 2008 Summer Olympic Games in Beijing, China, would be an impressive achievement for Sellers.

"That's a dream accomplishment," Sellers said.

Sellers will have a chance to make his dream come true when he competes in the U.S. Olympic Team Trials, which begin June 27 in Eugene, Ore. Sellers said if he competes like he knows he can, he thinks he has a good shot to make the team.

Track coach Cliff Rovelto also believes in Sellers' talent. He said Sellers' pure athletic ability is a major contributor to his success.

"He's good. It's really pretty simple," Rovelto said. "Any athlete in any sport that is competing at a very high level — they're really good. He's good and that's first and foremost."

Senior captain Lamar Garrett said Sellers displays this talent as well as his understanding of the sport.

"He brings a lot of experience," Garrett said. "He shows you that anything is possible."

Like winning the national championship, qualifying for the Olympics will take more than just talent. Rovelto said Sellers puts in the work to perfect his jumps.

"He has outstanding work ethic, and he tries to do everything right — and that's not always common with these guys and gals who are really good," Rovelto said. "He is a professional in how he conducts himself. He stays healthy. You couldn't train at a very high level if you are tired and broken down."

While Rovelto credits Sellers' talent and work ethic for all his success, Sellers said his coach has played a large role in his accomplishments.

"I just do what he tells me to do," Sellers said. "He is just so educated on the biomechanics of the sport and when to peak just right."

With the talent, work ethic and coaching Sellers has, he hopes that if he makes the Olympic team he can be successful.

"I'd like to think that I could go and make the finals, but I don't know what to expect," Sellers said.

If Sellers qualifies for the Olympics, he said a good showing would help accomplish another goal of his.

"It would be a really good stepping-stone into international competition," Sellers said.

Sellers won the 2007 NCAA championship when he cleared a height of 7-7.25. He was named Big 12 Performer of the Year following his performance in the Big 12 meet. He said this was a huge accomplishment for him, and qualifying for the Olympics would be a comparable feat.

"They're both equally meaningful," Sellers said. "Winning the national championship puts your name in the record books as a national champion, but there is something about competing with the best from all over the world that would be great."

While Sellers is aspiring to make the Olympic team, he has not lost focus on his collegiate competition. He said he is still highly motivated because he knows people want to knock off the national champion, and he wants to stay on top. He said it was also important to him to keep improving.

"The thing about high jumping is you can always jump higher," Sellers said.

YOUR HEALTH

Spring cold, flu season can easily be avoided

Everyone has that class in which the professor can't speak loud enough to be heard over the coughs, sneezes and sniffles coming from the students. You hear about every third word that is spoken, and your shirt sleeve is dripping wet from snot. Maybe you learned how to use a Kleenex in first grade, but wouldn't it be nice to just avoid the cold-flu ordeal that comes at the beginning of every spring semester?

There are a few things students can do to avoid missing the second week of class with a fever and muscle aches, and none of them are difficult.

First and foremost, wash your hands. Often. This means when you go to the bathroom, when you borrow your sick roommate's iPod, when you get done working out, after you blow your nose. Wash your hands. Washing your hands doesn't mean splashing around in the water; it means using soap and scrubbing. It also means using hot water. Also, be sure not to overuse antibacterial hand gel. These products can work wonders in a pinch, but bacteria can develop immunity to it if you overuse it.

The second-best step you can take to avoid getting sick is making sure you get enough sleep at night. This is the beginning of the semester, and unless you have an evil professor, you should not have had to pull an all-nighter yet. This is the time of year when your stress level and homework load should be relatively low. I realize in two weeks that could all change, but get ahead while you can. Everyone has heard how eight hours of sleep is ideal, but you know your body the best. Some people can get by on five hours — most of us can't — but you know when you haven't had enough Z's.

Along with getting enough sleep is knowing how to deal with stress. These two factors tend to go hand-in-hand. When you are stressed, you stay up later to get things done, or you can't sleep at all. This is where your stress-management skills come into play. Whether your stress-busting activity of choice is yoga, working out at Peter's Recreation Complex or baking cookies, find something and do it when life gets a little hairy. You might avoid a cold that could put you even farther behind than you already are.

You can also eat healthy foods to avoid getting sick. Orange juice and vitamin C have long been what people consume to avoid colds, but just eating more healthily in general should also help your body boost its immune system. Exercise can also

Beasley, Gipson honored

Freshman forward Michael Beasley was named the Phillips 66 Big 12 Rookie of the Week for men's basketball. It is the third time he has received this honor this year.

Junior forward Marlies Gipson was named as the Phillips 66 Big 12 Player of the Week for women's basketball. It is her first time receiving this award. It is also the first time a K-State player on the women's team has received the award since it was presented to Kendra Wecker in 2005.

K-State and Gonzaga are the only two teams in NCAA Division I-A basketball whose women's and men's teams are undefeated in conference play.

With the rankings received Monday, it marks the first time both the K-State men's and women's teams have been ranked simultaneously in the AP poll since March 2, 1982, when the men were No. 17 and the women were No. 19.

Sexual health awareness group asked to remove logo

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The "Protect your Willie" T-shirts from Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators will no longer be printed as a response to alumni complaints about portraying K State in a negative light.

"I received several phone calls that asked us to remove the university logo on the 'Protect your Willie' shirts," said Tami Breyer, K State director of licensing for institutional advancement.

Breyer said the issue with the shirts involved the use of Willie the Wildcat, K state's mascot, to convey the message of sex.

"It's a great campaign," Breyer said. "It's just something [where] we didn't want the logo to seem as if we were endorsing intercourse."

The shirts have been around for at least five years, said Annisa Shockey, senior in biology and president of S.H.A.P.E.

The main purpose of the shirts is to pay for the organization's annual trip to a peer educator conference, Shockey said.

S.H.A.P.E. is no longer allowed to continue printing the shirts with the university logo for fundraising, said Carol Kennedy, director of health promotion and nutrition counseling for Lafene Student Health Center.

Advertising the shirts is not allowed, however, the remaining inventory will be sold, Kennedy said.

The issue came up after S.H.A.P.E. tried to design new, similar shirts for basketball season that would have read, "Don't be Forward with your Willie, Guard it," Shockey said.

"I guess they got irritated with us doing those kinds of shirts and they have had complaints, mostly from alumni, about that shirt," she said.

The organization will be able to print the new shirts as long as the shirts do not have any

House to address bill increasing driving age

By Amanda Keim
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For years, the debate surrounding teen driving has echoed through the halls of the Kansas legislative chamber. A bill passed by the Senate last year to alter current Kansas laws regarding teen driving could soon be passed in the House.

The bill would create a system of graduated licensing, which is a three-stage process used to retain a license.

The first stage would begin at age 15 with a driver being able to obtain a permit and drive with supervision. Similar to the current policy, a new driver would be required to log 50 hours of driving time.

"The purpose of that first stage is to get them a lot of experience in a controlled environment where they can learn how to be successful," said Jim Hanni, executive vice president of AAA Kansas.

Hanni said at the conclusion of the first year, at age 16, a person could begin driving unsupervised. For an additional six months, however, a supervising adult would have to be present in the vehicle from 9 p.m. to 5 a.m., and no more than one non-sibling under the age of 21 could be a passenger.

"The chances of [teenagers] being hurt or killed in a car crash go up exponentially with the number of passengers in the car," Hanni said.

At the end of the six-month period, the driver would be fully licensed and unrestricted.

"You're not saying [teens] can't drive; they just can't drive unrestricted for six months," Hanni said. "It's really not that different from what they're doing right now, but it is enough of a change to ease teens into the full responsibility of driving."

Drivers who are younger than the age of 18 will also be prohibited from operating cell phones and other electronic devices while driving.

Although these regulations are meant to increase safety on the roads, some representatives are questioning whether this bill will allow teen drivers enough experience.

"The majority of the testimony we received, you could break down into two parts. One was younger drivers have more accidents; the second part was younger drivers have more accidents because they have less experience," said Rep. Tom Sloan, R-Lawrence. "What I and the majority of the public are struggling with is, if you raise the driving age, how do you ensure a young driver gets enough experience? Many of us are looking for a way to increase the amount of practice that a younger driver gets."

Sloan also believes other parts of the bill leave young drivers in danger.

"Currently, most accidents with young people occur at night; yet, we require relatively little practice time at night," Sloan said.

Of the 50 hours that 14-year-old drivers are currently required to log, only ten of those hours must be nighttime hours.

A survey of 1,000 families with teens conducted by the Kansas Teen Driver Research and Education Project concluded a majority of Kansas teens and parents agree with several components of the bill.

"There is a tendency to think that people aren't going to like this, but people do like it," Hanni said. "When you talk to the parents whose kids have gone through licensing, parents and teens approved of a graduated approach; they approved of the restrictions."

Governor asks for relief to clean storm damage

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Like many students, Juliann Todd said she did not expect her finals week to be interrupted last semester. In the midst of studying for finals, Todd, senior in kinesiology, found herself without power for more than a week, which she said completely changed her normal operation of life.

"I had to live at other people's houses, and it just made me feel homeless," Todd said.

She was one of hundreds of students who lost power during the December ice storm.

In a recent press release, Sharon Watson, director of Public Affairs for the Kansas Adjutant General's Office, said 60 counties had significant damage and debris as a result of the ice storm. Watson said this amount of damage made the area eligible for federal funding and Gov. Kathleen Sebelius made a formal request on Jan. 23.

"We are waiting to hear if that has been approved," Watson said. "It's usually a fairly quick response — a couple of days to a week."

Watson said there were several people who were severely affected by the storm including six people who were killed — four in traffic accidents and two from exposure to cold weather.

"Initially, all 105 counties were included," Watson said. "After the storm passed, there were 60 counties [eligible] due to the amount of damage. If approved, these counties would be reimbursed."

Westar Energy, the largest electric provider in Kansas, has more than 674,000 customers, according to the company's Web site. Todd, along with other students, said she found herself stranded because she was unable to speak with a representative from Westar.

Todd said it was frustrating because the recording that played on Westar's toll-free hotline stated the power would come back on in 1-4 days, and then the timetable changed to 7-10 days. Todd said by this time, she was getting

Kansas book clubs let readers meet, discuss literature

By Veronika Novoselova
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Talk About Literature in Kansas is a program for all Kansas residents who love to read and share their opinions with others.

In more than 30 communities in Kansas, discussion groups meet on a regular basis, usually once or twice a month in different places across Kansas — at libraries, senior centers or historical societies. Each meeting lasts one to one-and-a-half hours. In Manhattan, the TALK meetings are at the Manhattan Public Library.

"It is a very popular program," said Teri Belin, administrative assistant and coordinator of the Manhattan Public Library's friends group. "There is a large group of people who come there time after time, and they seem to enjoy it. Scholars and speakers who come here are very knowledgeable and interesting individuals."

Each discussion has a leader who starts with some thought-provoking points, provides background information about authors and gives some explanations for complex ideas, because without knowing historic context, understanding the literature might be difficult.

Michaeline Chance-Reay, assistant professor of secondary education at K-State, joined the Kansas Humanities Council TALK program as a discussion leader in 1999. She said she handles discussions from the author's point of view.

The Kansas Humanities Council Resource Center helps TALK by providing materials such as books, brochures, press releases, publicity photos, finding a discussion leader for each meeting and paying speakers' remuneration and travel costs.

The local sponsor, which could be a library or other nonprofit group, schedules dates with discussion leaders, promotes and evaluates programs and keeps track of volunteer services. It also selects the series to present, which means that different communities discuss different books.

In January, KHC offered 31 series on various topics of interest like childhood classics, rural America, world faiths, American Indian mysteries, Kansas literary heritage and more. Each of the series contains four to seven books. This January, in Manhattan, residents gathered to discuss the book "O Pioneers!" by Willa Cather. On Feb. 26, they will share thoughts about "Dancing at the Rascal Fair," by Ivan Doig.

"The TALK program has been

K-State students devote time to help Manhattan children

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"I want that puppy," Anna Wilson, said to a K-State student with eyes as sad as the puppy she was gazing at.

Becca Dinkel, junior in social work, told Wilson why they could not purchase a puppy on their trip to the animal shelter, which is one of Wilson's favorite places.

Wilson trusted Dinkel's judgement, and the two attribute their connection with building this trust. Just like any other siblings, this pair also oc-asionally get into playful arguments.

Dinkel said spending time with Wilson helps her cope with missing her own sisters she cannot see on a regular basis.

Wilson is one of 135 local school-age children involved in Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan.

Once a week for one hour, several K-State students take time out of their schedules to make a difference in a child's life by participating in the program.

Dinkel said she has been with the same girl for two years and loves to see her grow.

"It is my escape to get away from school and stress," Dinkel said. "It's really just having fun together."

Seeing their mentor is something many of the mentees look forward to throughout the week.

"Sometimes I feel sad when leaving my big sister," Wilson said. "I like spending time with her."

Many of the children in the program come from one-parent homes or are in need of a positive role model, said Andrea Stover, case manager at Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan. The decision to be in the program for the children comes from the parents or guardians, Stover added.

The Big Brothers Big Sisters organization has two programs - community-based and school-based. The community-based program requires the volunteer, child and parents to contact a case worker once a month to monitor progress. This program requires the mentors to see their mentee at least once a week.

The second program consists of mentors having lunch or seeing their little brother or sister about once every two weeks for those who have less time.

The Big Brothers and Big Sisters program of Manhattan has many opportunities for students to become involved in a child's life.

Mentees grow fond of their mentors and the program tries to keep the same match for as long as possible, Stover said.

She not only works for the organization but also volunteers as a Big Sister.

"I've been matched with [my little sister] for two years now and love the attachment we have together," Stover said. "I can tell she really trusts my opinion and really looks up to me."

BIG BROTHERS AND BIG SISTERS STATISTICS

National research has shown that positive relationships between youth and their Big Brothers and Big Sisters mentors have a direct and measurable impact on children's lives. By participating in youth mentoring programs, Little Brothers and Sisters are:

- More confident in their schoolwork performance
- Able to get along better with their families
- 46% less likely to begin using illegal drugs
- 27% less likely to begin using alcohol
- 52% less likely to skip school

The program began in 1904 and currently operates in all 50 states and 12 countries around the world.

Commission discusses city funding

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The city council heard reports on the annual revenue and updates on the ethics policy for appointed and elected officials on Tuesday night.

Bernie Hayden, director of city finance, told commissioners there are four major sources of income for the city: cash balance, property tax, sales tax and utility sales.

Cash balances derive from money set aside from previous years to be carried forward until those funds are needed as delegated by the governing body, Hayden said.

Property tax makes up six percent of the total revenue collected by the city for general funds.

The sales tax comprises 32 percent of the general funds revenue.

"The rating agencies would like [the city council] to raise property tax and lower sales tax," Hayden said.

Commissioners Bruce Snead and Mark Hatesohl both voiced the negative effect to the commission if they comply to the rating agencies' wishes.

Ron Fehr, city manager, agreed with Snead and Hatesohl's comments.

Brian Williams, management assistant presented the proposed ethics policy to the commission following the annual revenue report.

The commission created the committee in September 2007 to come up with an ethics policy for elected and appointed officials like the members of the committee, Williams said.

Hatesohl said the city began pursuing an ethics policy when officials started leaving office and then lobbying the city for contracts within six months after leaving.

Along with the five main principles suggested by the committee, Snead suggested adding loyalty to the list of principles. He defined it as loyalty to the office the elected official serves.

The principle of transparency was a concern when dealing with confidential information, said Mayor Tom Phillips.

"During rezoning issues, we are limited about what we can say," Phillips said.

The council also discussed conflicts of interest when appointing citizens to boards and committees.

Snead said the phrase "direct financial benefit" needed to be defined so citizens would not be confused as to what is considered a conflict of interest.

Overall, council members said they were happy with the recommendations from the committee.

"That is a great thing for the staff," Hatesohl said. "We just need to tweak it for the council."

TO THE POINT

Sebilus makes smart decision

"Help is on the way" should be the title of Gov. Kathleen Sebelius' next speech.

Tree limbs are still piled up on the curb and even the occasional power cord can be seen lying across the sidewalk.

Obviously, Manhattan and several areas of Kansas are in dire need of the assistance Sebelius recently asked the national government for. More manpower means our city can be cleaned up quicker.

But will the help come fast enough? Snow is predicted for this weekend and with today's flurries, it might seem as though winter is back in full force. Manhattan officials should start thinking more about the clean up before they have a bigger problem to deal with.

Even though help might be on the way, citizens of Manhattan should do all they can to clean up.

Cut up the extra limbs in the yard to use for firewood. Keep leaves in a bag to use for fertilizer in the spring. Family time could be spent cleaning up the yard. It's every one's job to make sure this city gets cleaned up.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Liquor stores fight to keep chain stores out of market

Christina Forsberg | COLLEGIAN

Competition is the driving force in business. Competition forces firms in the market to adapt to change and provide higher quality goods at a cheaper price to the consumer.

For many years, Kansas has worked to limit competition in many sectors; however, the state government finally has started to look at lifting one of the many protectionist restrictions on the wine and spirits industry. This new bill would have a great effect on the city of Manhattan.

Many independently owned liquor stores in Manhattan have joined together with others across the state to oppose a bill allowing grocery stores, gas stations and other large retail stores to sell beer with five percent alcohol, wine and hard liquor, thus forcing out competition.

Contrary to what these owners think, the bill only allows the possibility to sell the product in those venues. The ultimate decision of whether the bill will be implemented resides in the hands of county governments.

There are many reasons why some are against this bill, but most are all wrong.

In opposition to the bill, Jeff Filby, owner of Filby Liquor Store, as reported by the K-State Collegian Jan. 25, said, "If the Hy-Vees and Wal-Marts and all them start selling wine and spirits and the strong beer, then the small liquor stores are out of business."

City Commissioner Bob Strawn also was interviewed in the Collegian article and believes the bill will not pass in state government because "Kansas is a pretty conservative state," said Strawn. "We are not moving as fast as other states around the country in terms of liquor sales. It's a reflection of who we are as Kansans."

Opposition to the liquor sales law does not derive from conservative values; it's an opposition originated by the religious influence in politics and businesses afraid to compete in a market with fewer restrictions.

To say this bill will be rejected because we are a conservative state is ridiculous. A conservative stance would be to pass the bill to reduce the governmental restrictions on business and promote free trade. Perhaps we should say opposition comes from Kansas being a "religious state" and businesses' fear their prices can't compete.

Those who are opposing the law based on a religious opposition should look to the Bible for advice - "Love thy enemy." Enemies or competing businesses increase competition, which allows others to keep their edge in the market. Big box stores can be scary, but smaller companies can learn a lot from their inventory methods.

The higher the volume, the lower the price, but big box stores sell other products and might not have the higher volume necessary to have the cheapest prices.

Businesses like Hy-Vee have other ways to compete in the alcohol market if this bill is defeated. Hy-Vee Inc. has opened liquor stores not physically connected with their grocery stores; Hy-Vee Wine and Spirit stores were built on the border between Kansas and Missouri to edge into the Sunday liquor sales market.

According to comments made by Strawn, a wine and spirits specialty store could be possible. Instead of an "extension of the grocery store," Hy-Vee will only have to make a separate facility on the same property. Prices for alcohol are relatively equal across Manhattan, but each store is a little different.

Some might have cheaper beer, while others have liquor and wine for lower prices; however, at 10:45 p.m. on a Saturday night, students don't really care which store has the cheapest price. We just care how fast we can get another case or bottle before closing time.

Americans lack awareness of homeless veterans

The Iraq war is just months away from its fifth anniversary. As March 19 draws near, the U.S. is faced with several burdens regarding the conflict.

Tragically, one of these burdens comes in the form of homeless veterans on U.S. streets.

I remember passing one of these unknown heroes while returning from a forensics trip in September 2007. When traveling through Oklahoma, I caught sight of an individual sitting on the side of the road with only the clothes on his back, a few bags and a sign that read, "One homeless veteran trying to find his way home."

The saddest thing about it was that it was not the first time I had seen a homeless veteran.

A source of embarrassment to our nation's integrity has always been the number of homeless individuals on the streets. A recent estimate by the National Alliance to End Homelessness reported roughly 700,000 people in the United States are homeless. Unfortunately, the Department of Veterans Affairs estimated roughly 200,000 of these men and women are veterans of our armed forces, making up more than one-fourth of this forgotten population.

After serving overseas, many veterans undergo the re-conditioning of the home front. Many of them are forced to combat a number of obstacles regarding their personal well-being, namely post-traumatic stress disorder. However, some fall short when it comes to achieving these goals.

Take the story of Herold Noel. On April 15, 2007, the San Francisco Chronicle reported Noel, after returning home from Iraq in 2004, became homeless while waiting for his disability checks from the Department of Veterans Affairs. Noel would eventually go on to tell his story in the documentary "When I Came Home," but only after battling alcoholism, a suicide attempt and post-traumatic stress disorder.

There are countless reasons why men like Noel end up in such situations. However, one of the biggest reasons for homelessness among soldiers is the lack of resources.

Paul Rieckhoff explained in his 2006 article "Homeless Heroes," on Military.com, that some veterans are not getting the support they need because the Department of Veteran Affairs is underfunded.

"Despite outcry from every major veterans' organization in America, funding for the VA is still not mandatory," said Rieckhoff, founder of Iraq and Afghanistan Veterans of America.

Fortunately, we live in a generation that provides care and best wishes for its soldiers serving overseas. But as you can see, more needs to be done. There is nothing more honorable than for young Americans to willingly go overseas and risk losing their lives for their country.

Survival is nothing short of a blessing. But if you ask anyone with common sense, there is nothing more tragic than when someone returns home to conditions of abject poverty and hardship.

The U.S. owes it to its veterans to ensure they have the best of care and stability for all they have been through.

Many are still giving their service. It is time for us to give back.

Social Web site to pay students for using it

By Veronika Novoselva
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students spend hours on social networking Web sites like Facebook.com and Myspace.com. The latest social site vying for students' time, Yuwie.com, promises to pay users money for spending time online and bringing new members into an online community.

According to the Web site's terms and conditions, Yuwie.com has all the features expected from a social networking site, including personal profiles, groups, e-mail and videos.

The Web site pays users whenever a person's profile is viewed. Members earn revenue from referral activity, which means when a person invites friends, their activity counts as well.

To become a member, each participant has to be at least 14 years old and only one account per person is allowed. Cheating is prevented; refreshing or reloading a page will not count as a page view.

Yuwie users can change their profile information at any time and control how others communicate with them. For example, users can see most of the personal pages on the site without having an account.

The Web site was launched in summer 2007 and has more than 444,000 members. About 2,000 new members join every day, which is still far from the 62 million active users of Facebook.com.

"I didn't know such a thing existed, actually," said Sarah Beebe, freshman in pre-professional business administration and natural resources and environmental conservation. "But it sounds really cool. I would love to have a page that pays me to be social."

Yuwie works almost like a pyramid scheme — the more people are invited, the more money a member earns. But the difference is Yuwie is completely free. It is based on a revenue-sharing concept — the company will give part of the advertising revenue to its users.

According to a video on the Yuwie main page, other social networking outlets are making more than $20 million a month while users "do all the work."

On Yuwie.com, users find out how much they have earned on the 15th day of every month.

The revenue-sharing rate is determined by the sum of money the Web site received from advertisements in the past month. Advertising rates vary because they are determined by several factors such as the time of year, current economy, and Internet traffic, according to the video.

Zack Troilo, former K-State student, said he likes the fact that it may pay out to have made an account and use the site. He hasn't been a member long enough to receive a check, but he hopes to be paid soon.

"I also haven't talked to a lot of my friends about it yet," he said.

So far the main setback of the Web site is the presence of advertisements directly on a user's profile.

The idea of paying money to Internet users is becoming increasingly popular. Another outlet called Yagata.com is newer than Yuwie. It offers more than 700 free games and job searches, a user-friendly layout and mobile script which allows viewing of users' profile on any mobile device. The first 2,000 Yagata.com members will be a part of the revenue-sharing plan as well.

Art professor draws on experience from Roman pieces

By Brandi Brumback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If someone had asked Jason Sculla five years ago where he would be today, Manhattan, Kan., might not have been his guess.

A Florida native and soccer player until his undergraduate years, Sculla is now an assistant professor of drawing and printmaking at K-State.

Sculla said he has always been a creative person but did not fully understand what drawing was until having an influential teacher in his early years of undergraduate study.

"Somehow [drawing] just became an addiction that hasn't stopped yet," Sculla said.

He received a Bachelor of Fine Arts from the University of Central Florida in 2003. He earned a Master of Fine Arts in printmaking from the Tyler School of Art in 2005.

As part of his graduate studies, Sculla spent a year in Rome in 2003 studying under a master printmaker and creating art. He is consistently inspired by Byzantine mosaics and other Renaissance or classical Italian art, which he aims to reinterpret through his own medium.

Daniel Dallmann, head of the printmaking department at the Tyler School of Art, describes Sculla's work as having interesting spatial relationships with an often sensual theme.

In Rome, Sculla spent some time studying Michelangelo's "Last Judgment," after which he created his own version.

"It's just this whole chaos and absurdity of if there was a last judgment," Sculla said.

Sculla's pieces generally feature two figures in a passionate embrace. He said prior to starting a piece, he studies the material he will work with for a long time until the figures start to appear.

"[It's] almost like the ink blot test," Sculla said.

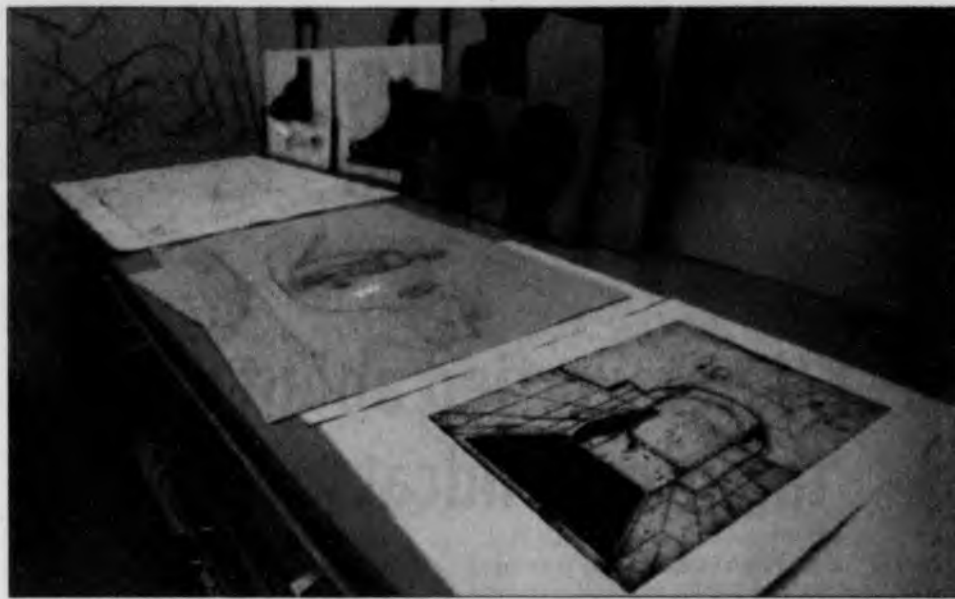

Most of his works are prints made from copper etchings or paintings on wood blocks, which he then carves designs into.

Lined up against the walls, the floor and inside the drawers of his studio, Sculla has prints and drawings, which focus on the human condition. Sculla worked on anywhere from 20 to 25 pieces at a time.

him eight or nine hours to finish, however, no piece is ever officially completed. He said he constantly goes back and works on his images.

Sculla received a University Research Grant in 2007, allowing him to return to Rome for two months, where he participated in a residency at the Il Quadrato di Omega print shop.

This is Sculla's second year of teaching at K-State. When he came to Manhattan to teach it was his first trip to the Midwest. He said the people in Manhattan are nice and the students are the hardest working he has ever seen.

Gerry Craig, K-State associate professor of art and department head, said Sculla's teaching style is informal and relaxed. She said his demeanor is conducive to testing techniques students are uncomfortable with, which is important when starting out in art.

With his work, Sculla aims to make people think.

"What I want people to do is to open up enough to think about it, not try to find out what I meant by it," Sculla said. "There's really not a right answer with my work, as long as you're thinking about it and it creates some kind of a feeling."

His art has been showcased throughout the United States and also in Rome. Sculla's work will be displayed at the Manhattan Arts Center in late February.

KU not worried about upstart, talented Wildcat men's team

So this is it, huh — The year the streak ends? Michael Beasley guaranteed it, and if anyone has the right to make such a remark, it's Beasley, arguably the best player in college basketball.

But Kansas has heard it before.

"It makes me smile, laugh a little bit," said Kansas sophomore guard Sherron Collins. "I think Huggins guaranteed a victory, too, last year."

You're right, Sherron. But Huggins didn't have a team this good. Though K-State was snubbed from last season's NCAA Tournament, the Wildcats from a year ago would be no match for the current group.

K-State will surely make the tournament, and with a frontcourt of Beasley and Bill Walker, a Final Four isn't completely out of the question.

Ordinarily, this would be the year the streak ends. K-State is as good as it's been in a long, long time. But facing Kansas could be as scary as it gets in college hoops. Would you really want to guarantee a victory against possibly the best Kansas team, well, ever?

"I heard it, but it really doesn't matter; we're gonna play as a team — one guy can't beat a team," said senior forward Darnell Jackson. "Actions speak louder than words, and when it's time for us to play, we're gonna go out there and play."

And play they will. The Jayhawks can score from anywhere on the court. They can play at any pace and any style. They can sub in body after body and hardly have a drop-off in talent. Kansas has eight players averaging at least 15 minutes a game and seven who average more than seven points.

Collins would play at least 30 minutes a game anywhere else, besides perhaps Memphis, but at Kansas he comes off the bench. Cole Aldrich, a freshman

K-State team's improvement noticeable throughout season

I certainly don't recognize this K-State basketball team. To say the players did a lot of growing up while the students were home for break is something of an understatement. It's like they went from toddlers to applying for their driver's licenses in three weeks.

When a triple-team is thrown on Michael Beasley, the team doesn't panic and run for the hills. If the offensive scheme completely breaks down (see the last five seconds of the Oklahoma game), they think clearly and actually make a worthwhile play.

I'm not saying this team hasn't made mistakes or acted like freshmen since the winter break. But there's something magical in the air whenever they step onto the court at Bramlage Coliseum. The fans have been coming out in droves to support their team and, trust me, it has helped. If the fans honestly don't think they are making a difference on the final score, they should think back to the Texas A&M game, when the raucous purple mass thoroughly rattled the Aggies right out of their No. 10 ranking.

Not only has the team grown up, but the coach has as well. Frank Martin has been coaching better and his team of assistants has done an excellent job of developing schemes that play to the team's strengths. They have put together a starting lineup of Clint Stewart, Blake Young, Andre Gilbert, Bill Walker and Michael Beasley. This lineup has a 6-1 record so far this season.

Martin has also been smarter with his substitutions. He's seen the play of Darren Kent gradually improve, so he's increased Kent's playing time. Both Gilbert and Jacob Pullen have stepped up and are being rewarded accordingly.

Tennis freshman moving past language, playing-level barriers

Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Stop and think about the level of culture shock many face when traveling to a foreign country. Now factor in the assimilation process for K-State athletes who face a steep language barrier and compete at the highest level in intercollegiate athletics. These challenges could seem like a daunting task, but K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau helps players deal with these problems on a regular basis.

The three freshman members of his team hail from the European countries of Slovenia and France, and the remainder of his squad came from Venezuela, Argentina and the Czech Republic. Pauline Guemas, Vanessa Cottin and Antea Huljev make up the Wildcats' freshman class this year and have had many adjustments to the NCAA version of the game they have grown up with.

"I'd say the adjustment is more to a higher level of competition," Bietau said. "Depending on where they are from, they have played on clay a lot; that's obviously an adjustment there. It's more of a natural progression that they'd go through wherever they are."

Huljev, a native of Velenje, Slovenia, boasts a 7-6 record in singles play and 5-6 record with a variety of doubles partners. She said adjustment to the United States version of tennis was not that big of an issue.

"I think everything is the same in Slovenia," she said. "I like to do hard work and I like to play tennis, so nothing's a big deal. I like it."

Senior Olga Klimova of Brno, Czech Republic, said the adjustment process beyond the language barrier has been smooth and minimal at most.

"I think it has been pretty good," she said. "The girls have a language barrier, but we try to talk to them as much as we can. So I think they are slowly getting used to living in the United States. So I think it has been pretty good."

Cottin, who arrived in Manhattan in January from Ouainville, France, was thrust into action quickly. She has posted a 1-2 record in doubles action and is 0-3 in singles play.

Guemas, from St. Fort, France, has a 2-8 singles record and has begun doubles play with the arrival of fellow French native Cottin. The duo has a 1-2 record and is comfortable playing together.

"The communication is definitely easier because we both speak French," Guemas said.

Bietau said progress has been made, but there is still work to do.

"Until we get a few [matches] under our belt, we don't have the final answers on that," he said. "They have done pretty well in terms of more adapting to being in a different country more than the tennis part of it."

Antea Huljev, Vanessa Cottin and Pauline Guemas are new members of the women's tennis team this season. Huljev is from Velenje, Slovenia, Cottin is from Ouainville, France, and Guemas is from St. Fort, France.

Want to be considered the ultimate fan?

Alltel Communications is sponsoring the "My Circle Pick and Roll Challenge" that will offer several prizes to the competitors who pick the most correct winning teams. The grand prize will receive $100,000 and will be flown by private jet to their choice of basketball tournaments.

The competition opened Tuesday. To sign up, go to www.fan.com/alltel and enter. From there, the competitors will pick the winners from several different games in a five-week period.

The winners with the three-highest point totals will be flown to Charlotte, N.C., on March 12 where they will be interviewed by a panel of three celebrities, including college basketball analyst Dick Vitale.

There also will be weekly prizes. The player who receives the most points every week will receive $1,000.

Karli Razzo, account coordinator for Taylor Public Relations — the firm that handles the Alltel account — said there's an extra incentive for people who show up. The school who can get the most competitors to show up will be awarded a free concert with comedian Frank Caliendo. Caliendo appears on his own personal TV show, Frank TV on TBS, as well as on MadTV, doing various impressions, including George W. Bush, Bill Clinton, Dr. Phil and the cast of Seinfeld.

5 Missouri players suspended for tonight's game

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Three days after a weekend brawl left his top scorer with a broken jaw, Missouri basketball coach Mike Anderson has suspended five players indefinitely.

In a statement from the university, Anderson declined to indicate the reason for the discipline, calling the infractions a violation of team rules. But the move comes as Columbia police verified Tuesday that several teammates were with senior guard Stephon Hannah when he was attacked outside the downtown nightclub Athena early Sunday morning. The injury could cause Hannah to miss the rest of the season.

Suspended from Wednesday's home game against Nebraska, and possibly beyond, are senior guard Jason Horton and senior forwards Marshall Brown, Darryl Butterfield and junior forward Leo Lyons. Each is either a starter or a key reserve. Hannah, who returned home to Chicago after surgery, also is suspended.

"I am very disappointed in the actions of these young men," Anderson said. "We have defined team rules and when those rules aren't followed, our guys must be held accountable for their actions."

Sgt. Ken Hammond, supervisor of the city's major crimes unit, didn't identify the players who accompanied Hannah, but noted that "there were numerous other players there."

Anderson implemented what he called a "zero-tolerance" policy after junior forward DeMarre Carroll — his nephew — was shot in the ankle outside another Columbia nightclub over the summer. Police said Carroll was a bystander trying to break up a fight.

Along with the injuries suffered by Hannah and Carroll, three other Tiger players have been involved in off-court violence or misconduct since Anderson was hired less than two years ago.

One of those was Butterfield, who was arrested on charges of third-degree domestic assault for allegedly punching an ex-girlfriend. He was suspended before the season started but was reinstated after missing one exhibition game and an intrasquad scrimmage.

Butterfield has since pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of disturbing the peace, a misdemeanor, and was given a six-month suspended sentence and two years of probation. He also was ordered to attend 20 hours of anger management classes.

Kalen Grimes, the school's leading rebounder and starting center last season, was dismissed from the team after being arrested for hitting a man in the face with the butt of a shotgun in St. Louis in July. Last February, reserve guard Mike Anderson Jr., the coach's son, was suspended from the team after a drunken-driving arrest but was later reinstated.

WORLD NEWS

VENEZUELAN GUNMEN
RELEASE ALL HOSTAGES

ALTAGRACIA DE ORITUCO, Venezuela — Gunmen who held dozens of hostages inside a Venezuelan bank for more than a day fled in an ambulance but were caught Tuesday along a roadside, where they surrendered and freed their last five captives.

One of the robbers shot himself in the leg when his gun went off during the chase, but none of the hostages were seriously hurt, said Justice Minister Ramon Rodriguez Chacin, calling it a "100 percent" success.

The gunmen first let three hostages go after police caught their vehicle, and then negotiated while holding on to the last two, Guayrico state Gov. Eduardo Manuitt said.

They eventually turned over their guns and a grenade and then were ordered to the ground as police arrested them, Manuitt said. The pursuit ended less than two hours after the gunmen fled the bank under a deal negotiated with police.

"This nightmare is over," Manuitt told state television.

The arrests ended an ordeal that began Monday morning with a botched bank robbery in this town southeast of Caracas. The hostage standoff at the Banco Provincial branch was the longest in at least a decade in Venezuela, and every twist in TV and radio news across the country and in neighboring Colombia.

In the final hours, some hostages inside the bank held up signs in the windows with desperate pleas for help and used cell phones to call their relatives.

Under the deal with police, the gunmen were permitted to leave with five hostages who agreed to accompany them, freeing the rest of the captives at the bank. Police allowed the gunmen to flee because "they threatened to start killing the hostages in 20 minutes," Manuitt said.

BUS CRASH ON ICY ROAD;
KILLS 25 IN CHINA

GUANGZHOU, China — At least 25 people were killed as a bus plunged off an icy roadway in China on Tuesday, the latest casualties in a surge of severe winter weather that has disrupted the country's busiest holiday travel season and stranded hundreds of thousands of Chinese.

About 500,000 people — most migrant workers — were stuck in the southern city of Guangzhou, railway officials said. Heavy snowfall in provinces to the north had cut off parts of the busy railway line that starts in the city and ends in Beijing.

The crash brought the known death toll in the last two weeks to about 50. Xinhua News Agency said the bus veered off the road, plunging some 40 yards into a valley in mountainous Guizhou province at 7:40 a.m.

The news agency said that in addition to the 25 deaths, there were also 13 people injured, accounting for all 38 aboard. Two passengers were hospitalized in critical condition, while injuries to the 11 others were less serious.

The government, scrambling Monday to prevent riots among the crowds that have swelled daily since the storms began Jan. 10, offered temporary shelter in schools and convention centers. Hundreds of police and soldiers were posted around the train station.

Frustrated in their efforts to return home, migrant travelers created small camps of suitcases in the mud outside the train station, scattering chicken bones and cigarette butts.

BRITAIN'S MI6 WARNED ABOUT AL-QAIDA
INTELLIGENCE

LONDON — Britain's head of overseas intelligence warned that Saudi Arabia likely would stop sharing vital information on terrorism if prosecutors pursued an investigation into alleged corruption in an arms deal, lawmakers disclosed Tuesday.

Ministers were told the inquiry into the BAE Systems PLC arms deal with Saudi Arabia could lead to a withdrawal of Saudi assistance on counterterrorism, according to the annual report of the Intelligence and Security committee. The committee scrutinizes the work of Britain's intelligence and security agencies.

Britain's Serious Fraud Office in December 2006 ended the inquiry into allegations that BAE Systems ran a $118.9 million "slush fund" offering sweeteners to Saudi Arabian officials in return for lucrative arms contracts.

BAE has denied the accusations. Prince Bandar bin Sultan, a former ambassador to the United States and now head of Saudi Arabia's National Security Council, has also denied that he profited from the deal.

MI6, Britain's overseas intelligence service, believed Saudi Arabia likely would end information-sharing with Britain if investigators continued the inquiry, former Attorney General Peter Goldsmith told the committee. MI6 raised objections to the prosecution before Britain's Serious Fraud Office decided to end the case, he said.

TO THE EDITOR

Movies add comedy, boundaries of taste

Editor,

You know, I don't believe anyone walked out of "Juno" or "Knocked Up" and said to themselves, "I hope I'm soon confronted with the reality of an unplanned pregnancy because that ought to be worth a good chuckle."

Ms. Childress seems to believe this is in fact what otherwise reasonable people might do and wants to protect us from bad choices by tut-tutting what we moviegoers find humorous and Oscar-worthy. Shenanigans, I say. In her opinion, comedy should never be based on pain, suffering, awkwardness or desperation.

I ask you, editor, has Ms. Childress ever actually seen a comedy? There's tragedy and comedy in all life throws at us and a creative effort can explore either or both of these.

In the case of these two films, the characters faced their situations with humor and a good deal of heart.

There are boundaries of taste, to be sure, but these boundaries are better formed by the individual and not some self-appointed arbiter of what makes a tasteful comedy in the shape of this prudish nanny figure. To paraphrase Oscar Wilde, there is no such thing as a moral or amoral movie.

Movies are well written or poorly written — and acted and directed. That is all.

Column on Sebelius misleading to readers

Editor,

I just read Brett King's article about Governor Sebelius and I must say the statement, "After rapidly expanding the size of government in Kansas, Sebelius has done her best to increase the tax burden on all Kansas citizens. According to the Tax Foundation, income taxes in the state of Kansas are at an all-time high," is misleading. Obviously this is an opinion piece, but opinions can be wrong.

In November 2005, Time magazine named Sebelius as one of the five best governors in America, praising her for eliminating a $1.1 billion debt she inherited, ferreting out waste in state government and strongly supporting public education — all without raising taxes. Her bipartisan approach to governing also received praise.

Sebelius brought people together to push through funding for our state universities, which included K-State, that were crumbling, literally. She has brought people together to tackle health issues in Kansas. She cut waste from the state budget to the tune of millions of dollars or reallocated funds to areas that needed it. She and the statehouse are currently focusing on efforts to bring jobs to rural Kansas. She gave state employees a desperately needed raise. State-classified employees — there are several thousand here are the university — didn't receive an increase for close to five years.

Because of Sebelius and her ability to work and compromise together with the Republican-controlled statehouse, conditions in Kansas have vastly improved from the conditions she inherited.

Kan. governor endorses Obama

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EL DORADO, KAN. — Democrat Barack Obama intensified a serious effort Tuesday to win what has been a safe Republican state and picked up Gov. Kathleen Sebelius' endorsement for his White House bid.

Hundreds of cheering supporters braved blowing snow and frigid temperatures to crowd into a gymnasium at Butler Community College to see Obama the week before Kansas' presidential caucuses. The city fire marshal estimated 1,900 people were in the gym and about 400 more were in overflow areas in other buildings.

Obama has Kansas ties: His mother was born at Fort Leavenworth during World War II, and Stanley Dunham, her father and Obama's grandfather, was a native of El Dorado. His rally occurred on Kansas Day, the anniversary of the state's admission to the Union in 1861.

He began his speech by declaring: "We're among friends here. We're family."

He said he could talk about making politics less divisive because of his personal experiences. "It's a story that began here in El Dorado," he said.

Democratic presidential candidates long had sought Sebelius' backing in a state that George W. Bush carried by large margins in the 2000 and 2004 elections. No Democratic nominee for the White House has won Kansas' electoral votes since 1964, but Sebelius has won two terms and prospered politically.

"Our country is more than a collection of red states and blue states because my story could happen only in the United States of America," Obama said.

He pointed to Sebelius as an example: "She's shown America that the Democratic Party is a party that can run anywhere and win anywhere and lead anywhere."

Sebelius won re-election in 2006 with nearly 58 percent of the vote, even though less than 27 percent of voters in Kansas are registered Democrats.

Her success has led national Democratic leaders to describe her as one of the party's brightest stars. She gave the Democratic response to Bush's State of the Union address Monday night.

"Barack Obama has Midwestern values, values that we know about, and he got them from his grandparents and his mom," she said.

State and national Republican Party officials portrayed both Obama and Sebelius as out-of-touch liberals. Christian Morgan, the state GOP's executive director, said endorsing Obama "does nothing for Kansas."

"It is simply an attempt by the governor to increase her national visibility at the expense of the people of Kansas," he said.

Also questioning the significance of Sebelius' endorsement was Dan Lykins, the state Democratic Party's treasurer and co-chairman of Hillary Rodham Clinton's presidential campaign in Kansas.

"What really counts is not who endorses someone, but who gets out and votes in the caucuses, and a lot of them have already made up their minds," Lykins said.

Clinton has three paid staffers in Kansas and opened offices earlier this month in Kansas City, Topeka and Wichita. But Obama opened his Kansas headquarters in Lawrence in October and has 18 staff members in the state.

Kansas Democrats will have caucuses at 50 sites on Super Tuesday to determine the votes of 32 of their 41 delegates to the Democratic National Convention this summer in Denver. Sebelius is one of the remaining nine delegates who will represent the state.

Some Obama supporters were jubilant to learn that Sebelius' endorsement, rumored for months, was official.

"The momentum already was going Obama's way and this will be like a gust of wind and put him over the top," said Rep. L. Candy Ruff, of Leavenworth.

Joe Brichacek, a high school senior from Heston, described himself as an undecided voter before Obama's speech. Afterward, he said he was "pretty far convinced" to vote for Obama.

"The endorsement of Gov. Sebelius means something to me," said Brichacek, who turns 18 before the November election, making him eligible to participate in the caucuses.

Before traveling to El Dorado, Sebelius said her two "20-something" sons and 86-year-old father, former Ohio Gov. John Gilligan, were already backing Obama. In El Dorado, she joked: "I'm here because my two sons are driving me crazy."

For Obama, it was another in a string of high-profile endorsements in the past two days, following on the heels of those from Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass.; his son, Rep. Patrick Kennedy, D-R.I.; and Caroline Kennedy, daughter of President Kennedy.

But Lykins said Clinton has strong support in Kansas among labor unions and "regular Democrats" who have long been active in the party.

"He's a good speaker, but that in and of itself should not determine who you should vote for," Lykins said of Obama. "He can say what he's going to do, but he hasn't done it. She's done it."

Dodge ball club gains its highest turnout

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Every Tuesday for the past four years, a specialized club has gathered with one goal: to play dodge ball.

The K-State dodge ball club is in its fourth year and shows no signs of leaving. The club has an average attendance of 30 to 50 students and set a record last semester for the amount of participants.

"Last fall we had 147 people show up to play," said Luke Stramel, junior in theater and marketing and vice president of the club. "It was hectic, but it was one of the most fun nights we've had."

To join the club, there are three requirements. Prospective club members are required to sign a waiver, show up willing to participate and pay $5 per semester. Stramel said the money offsets the cost of replacing the equipment, most notably the playground balls used by the team.

"We break about one and a half balls a night," Stramel said. "We have people throwing them and kicking them and hitting sharp corners."

At the start of each meeting, the club divides into two teams. There are, however, times when the team gets to play against outside competition.

The University of Kansas and the University of Nebraska have had teams in the past and have challenged the K-State club to games.

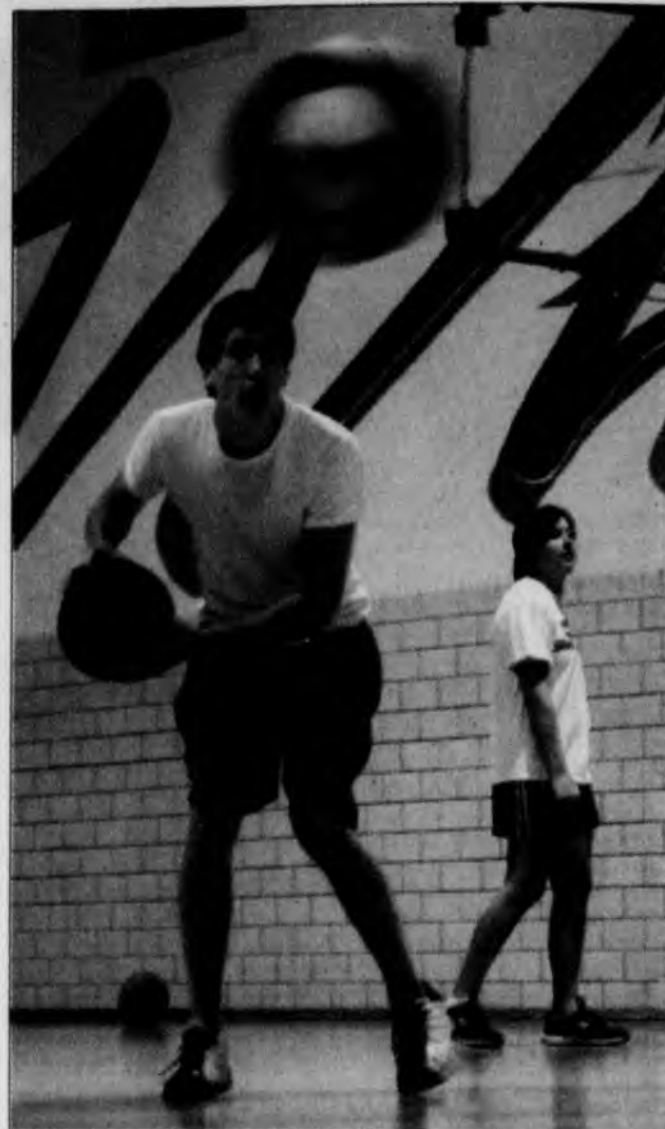

"We've played them and destroyed them both times," Stramel said. "So we like to jokingly refer to ourselves as the Big 12 champions of dodge ball."

When traveling out of the city to play, the club does not take all of its members, Stramel said, just the students who make it out every week. A quick team is assembled and the trip to a neighboring town is made.

In addition to playing other colleges, the team has played in organized tournaments around the nation.

The club uses traditional rules with one exception.

"In normal dodge ball, you

John Diederich, sophomore in open option, gets ready to hurl a ball in the dodge ball game played regularly by the dodge ball club in Ahearn gym every Tuesday night.

can hold the ball and block with it," Stramel said. "We play that you can't hold it and block. You either catch or dodge. That's it."

Stramel said the reason for the rule was to speed up the time to allow for the maximum amount of games played.

One reason the club keeps growing is word of mouth. Ryan Rush, senior in horticulture, heard about the club while he was still in high school and has been playing ever since.

"I really love the intensity," Rush said. "I'm really athletic, and with work, it makes it hard to work out. I mean, who can't make 9 to 11 on Tuesdays?"

The active aspect is also an attraction for other club members who have a hard time finding time to make it out to the gym.

Lauren Johanns, sophomore in interior architecture, said she enjoys playing dodge ball because it keeps her in shape.

Nebraska study says hand sanitizers alone may not curb infection

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

OMAHA, Neb. — Doctors and nurses on the go often skip soap and water in favor of an alcohol-based hand gel, thinking the quick-acting goo will kill bacteria on their hands and curb the spread of infection. It turns out that's not enough.

In a Nebraska hospital, medical workers nearly doubled their use of the alcohol-based gel, but their generally cleaner hands had no bearing on the rate of infections among patients.

The doctor who studied the problem pointed to many villains: rings and fingernails that are too long and hard to clean, poor handling of catheters and treatment areas that aren't sanitized.

"Hand hygiene is still important, but it's not a panacea," said Dr. Mark Rupp, an infectious disease specialist at the University of Nebraska Medical Center. He led the study at the adjoining Nebraska Medical Center.

The results of his study appear to contradict hospital guidelines from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention that say better hand hygiene — through frequent washing or use of hand gels — has been shown to cut the spread of hospital infections.

The spread of infection-causing germs in U.S. hospitals is a huge health problem, accounting for an estimated 1.7 million infections and 99,000 deaths each year, according to the CDC. These include drug-resistant staph, urinary tract infections and ventilator-associated pneumonia, among others.

"There are many factors that influence the development of hospital-acquired infections. It would be naive to think that a single, simple intervention would fix this problem," Rupp said.

His study appears in the January issue of Infection Control and Hospital Epidemiology.

Research has shown alcohol-based hand gels are more effective, faster and easier to use than soap and water. The findings of the new study were based on 300 hours of hand hygiene observations of nurses and doctors in two comparable intensive care units over a two-year period.

More gel dispensers were put in the units, and usage rose from 37 percent to 68 percent in one unit and from 38 percent to 69 percent in the other. Compliance for hand washing of any kind in most hospitals is estimated to be about 40 percent, according to experts, although some hospitals do better.

Every two months, bacteria samples were taken from health workers' hands, which were found to be cleaner when using the alcohol gel.

The infection rates in both ICUs were "relatively low," the study said. And researchers found "no significant relationship" between rates of hand gel use and infections among patients. In fact, in one unit the infection rate rose when the hand gel was widely available and its use promoted.

Rupp found the results surprising. However, he said hospital-borne infections cannot be stopped by better hand hygiene alone because infections aren't limited to person-to-person contact.

He suggested hand gels be combined with other measures, such as better cleaning of hospital units, proper insertion and maintenance of catheters, and doctors prescribing antibiotics only when necessary so more drug-resistant bacteria don't pop up.

He also said hospital workers shouldn't wear rings and should trim their fingernails even more than the CDC recommendation of no longer than a quarter of an inch. Rupp said bacteria showed up when nails extended just beyond the fingertip.

Mike Bell, who deals with infection control at the CDC, said that while he didn't agree that hand gels do little to reduce infection, Rupp was right to say they were just one part of the solution.

"If they don't do everything else right, having clean hands is not enough," he said.

Both Bell and Dr. David Hooper of Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston suggested that Rupp's study would have shown a reduction in infections if it was conducted over a longer period.

Hooper said the compliance rate for hand hygiene at Massachusetts General has been about 90 percent for the past several years. The number of drug-resistant staph cases was cut in half and continues to decline, he said.

Mukasey refuses to speak on legality of waterboarding

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Attorney General Michael Mukasey said Tuesday he will refuse to publicly say whether the interrogation tactic known as waterboarding is illegal, digging in against critics who want the Bush administration to define it as torture.

In a letter to Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, Mukasey said he has finished a review of Justice Department memos about the CIA's current methods of interrogating terror suspects and finds them to be lawful. He said waterboarding currently is not used by the spy agency.

Since waterboarding is not part of what Mukasey described as a "limited set of methods" used by interrogators now, the attorney general said he would not rule on whether it is illegal.

"I understand that you and some other members of the [Judiciary] Committee may feel that I should go further in my review, and answer questions concerning the legality of waterboarding under current law," Mukasey wrote in his three-page letter to Leahy, D-Vt. "I understand the strong interest in this question, but I do not think it would be responsible for me, as attorney general, to provide an answer."

The attorney general added: "If this were an easy question, I would not be reluctant to offer my views on this subject. But, with respect, I believe it is not an easy question. There are some circumstances where current law would appear clearly to prohibit the use of waterboarding. Other circumstances would present a far closer question."

The letter does not elaborate on what the other circumstances are.

Mukasey's letter was sent on the eve of his appearance at a Justice Department oversight hearing chaired by Leahy. It is Mukasey's first appearance before the committee since he took office Nov. 9.

In a terse statement released minutes after Mukasey's letter surfaced, Leahy called the attorney general's position a "last minute response" that merely parrots the Bush administration's long-time dodge on whether waterboarding is legal.

"It does not, however, answer the critical questions we have been asking about its legality," Leahy said in the statement. "Attorney General Mukasey knows that this will not end the matter and expects to be asked serious questions at the hearing tomorrow."

Waterboarding is an interrogation tactic that involves strapping down a person and pouring water over his cloth-covered face to create the sensation of drowning. The practice was banned by the CIA and the Pentagon in 2006.

Mukasey wrote that he would not publicly conclude that waterboarding is illegal because doing so could reveal too many "limits and contours" about the highly classified interrogation program to terrorists or other adversaries. He also noted that some senators resisted specifically banning waterboarding in 2006, when Congress passed the Military Commissions Act.

Congress has prohibited cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment of terror suspects. Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., a key sponsor of the 2006 bill, has said he was personally assured by administration officials that waterboarding was prohibited under the new law.

The issue of waterboarding briefly snarled Mukasey's confirmation hearings by the same Senate committee last October. At the time, Mukasey refused to define waterboarding as torture because he was unfamiliar with the classified Justice Department memos describing the process and legal arguments surrounding it.

He promised then, however, to review the memos if confirmed and return an answer to the Senate Judiciary Committee. Tuesday's letter represents that response.

Waterboarding also is at the heart of a Justice Department criminal investigation over whether the CIA illegally or otherwise improperly destroyed videotapes in 2005 of two terror suspects being interrogated. The tapes showed harsh interrogations, including possible waterboarding, of suspected terrorists Abu Zubaydah and Abd al-Rahim al-Nashiri in 2002, when both suspects were held in secret CIA prisons overseas. They were destroyed as intelligence officials debated whether waterboarding should be declared illegal.

Critics want the Justice Department to join other nations and outlaw waterboarding as illegal. But U.S. intelligence officials fear that doing so could make government interrogators — including those from the CIA — vulnerable to retroactive criminal charges or civil lawsuits.

Ten senators, led by Democrat Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, demanded last week that Mukasey immediately clarify his stand on waterboarding, saying he has had "ample time" to study this issue and reach a conclusion.

"Reasonable people can disagree, and have disagreed, about these matters," Mukasey wrote Tuesday. "It is precisely because the issue is so important, and the questions so difficult, that I, as the attorney general, should not provide answers absent a set of circumstances that call for those answers. Those circumstances do not present themselves today, and may never prevent themselves in the future."

WILLIE | Group must take logo off T-shirt

logo officially associated with K-State, like Willie on the shirt, Shockey said.

Ashlin Cox, freshman in mathematics and owner of a "Protect your Willie" T-shirt, said the shirts seem to be good sellers and raise a lot of money.

"It's a fun way to promote the school and promote safe sex at the same time," Cox said.

S.H.A.P.E. members serve K-State students by assisting peers in need of information on emotional, physical and social issues regarding sexually transmitted diseases. They also provide students with an understanding of health-related services offered by K-State and surrounding communities and motivating students by promoting positive attitudes about health and total wellness.

DRIVING | House hopes to improve teen driving

When you think about it, it's sensible."

Forty-six states have already passed similar pieces of legislation.

"This is what we can do about it in a way that's practical, reasonable and takes into consideration that parents and teens want to drive. There's been a lot of research over the years and the thing that has proven the most effective way to succeed in driving is the graduated driver's license," Hanni said.

Rep. Gary Hazylett, R-Lakin, said this legislation in combination with the passing of last year's mandatory seat belt law for those under 18 years of age will begin to have an effect on the number of teen-related car crash injuries and deaths.

"By changing it [current teen driving regulations] and with the seatbelt law, we hope to see a difference," he said.

Both Sloan and Hanni emphasized that the bill will not punish young drivers but to help them succeed as responsible drivers.

"It's not so much about the fault of the teen driver," Hanni said. "We put people in cars at a very early age and it's an adult activity. We put them in an environment that is extremely dangerous and it's the most dangerous thing they can do. It's a documented fact that it injures and kills more teens than anything else."

As the House continues to battle through the specifics of the bill, legislators said the overall goal is to keep teen drivers safe.

"I think there's a good chance that at least part of the bill will be passed by the legislature," Sloan said. "Very few bills are introduced and passed as they are introduced. We're always amending them. I suspect that we'll do something on training. I suspect that we will limit the number of people in the vehicle and play with ages, but probably not as drastically as they propose."

REQUEST | Westar offers home emergency tips

ready to leave for winter break.

Nick Bundy, Westar Energy spokesman, said the company did all it could during this outage. Bundy said there were two lines that customers could call, but it was more efficient for customers to call the automated line.

"Manhattan was one of the hardest hit due to the amount of ice that formed and the amount of vegetation that Manhattan has," he said.

According to a news release from Westar, 26,696 customers in Manhattan, or 86.3 percent of the city, were without power. The news release stated that the storm caused $73 million to $85 million worth of damage.

Bundy said Westar went into "storm mode" and began calling out-of-town crews 36-48 hours before the company reached the peak number of customers without power. Bundy said though Westar called for assistance many hours in advance, the crews had a couple hours of drive time before they reached Manhattan.

"For the most part, when you go back and look at everything, there are always some things you can do better," he said. "We had a big critique afterwards, which will allow us to keep going forward and discover what we can do better."

Bundy said Westar has begun to notice a trend of ice storms occurring roughly every three years. He also said there are tips and information published on the Westar Web site about how to be better prepared for a power outage.

"We want to encourage people to be prepared for an emergency situation," he said. "You never know where the next one might hit."

Watson said she wanted to stress the importance of being prepared for any kind of storm in Manhattan and the surrounding communities. She noted that this can primarily be done by having a home or car kit prepared. Watson said these kits should include the essentials like candles, flashlights, water and non-perishable food items.

Watson said she encouraged individuals in the community to take the necessary steps to be better prepared as well as local cities and counties to have the necessary plans set in stone.

TALK | Residents gather to talk about top books

around for a long time," said Karen McCulloh, member of the KHC board of directors and director of Friends of K-State Libraries. "You read a book and want to talk to somebody about it. Some books are easier, others are more complicated. The Kansas Humanities Council encourages people to read and to learn and think about humanities."

Generally, people check out and read the books before going to the discussion, though some don't. They come to find out which books are worth reading.

"This program is highly valued by Manhattan residents and library-goers, although many students often don't know about it or they are busy with reading for their English classes," McCulloh said.

McCulloh said the TALK series helps readers achieve a better understanding of the literature they have read and become interested in reading more books.

"For example, they would like to read something else by the same author or in the same time period," McCulloh said. "This program is very important because it promotes the love of books."

ROBINETT | KU too much for Wildcats

McDonald's All-American, has hardly even seen the floor.

So my question is, why would you add fuel to the fire? All Beasley has done is given Kansas bulletin board material and put extra pressure on his teammates to follow through with his guarantee. But just like a legitimate top-tier team, Kansas won't let such remarks affect the way it plays.

"That doesn't bother me, because I'll be honest with you, my guys have confidence," coach Bill

Self said. "But regardless of what anybody says concerning predictions or anything like that, that won't have anything to do with what happens between the lines. But that doesn't bother me. We'll talk to our guys about that. But when a guy is averaging 24 [points] and 13 [rebounds], I think he has a right to talk a little bit."

HAUN | Young team has grown together

Though Dominique Sutton has not made a significant impact on the scoreboard yet, he's only been practicing with the team for a month, so with a little time, I can see him making a significant contribution to the team.

I guess what is so confusing to me is that I don't recall there being a K-State team in the recent past who has not hit the panic button multiple times going down the stretch when the game is close. For every three-point shot the other team gets, Walker or Stewart will step right up and down another one. When Beasley gets a few fouls and is taken out of the game and replaced with Kent, someone on the floor still finds a way to score while doing everything possible to limit the opposition.

Not only is this team cool and confident, it is also playing smart. These players have enough experience now to read screens, see defensive schematics and quickly change from one defense to another. Even better, they are a true joy to watch.

During the second half of the Texas A&M game, fans could see them out there having fun. They were smiling, trying plays they hadn't before, making fun passes and working hard together. They were a team, and proved they could come together when it really mattered. Even if Texas A&M was overrated, it doesn't matter. K-State's 20-point victory still opened a lot of eyes.

I almost don't want this basketball season to end. Whether they play together for four years or whether they cut their losses and take off to the NBA, I'll say this for them: it's been an enjoyable season so far.

Different products, colors of makeup work better for different seasons

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the seasons fall away and melt into one another, it isn't just the leaves that change colors. Different colors of makeup are more popular during different seasons and can help add a little sparkle to a look while highlighting the natural beauty of a particular time of year.

"In the winter, cooler colors are very popular," said Heather Riniker, cosmetologist at cosmetics store Merle Norman. "Cool colors are shades like grays, blues, greens and neutral colors. These are a lot of the colors we sell a lot of during the colder seasons."

Riniker said as the weather starts warming up, the store will begin selling many shades of pink, while fall calls for warmer colors.

Merle Norman specializes in helping customers find shades of makeup and eye shadow colors that will perfectly match their skin type, and Riniker said the general rule is lighter shades of color for lighter skin types and darker shades for darker skin.

"Everyone has either a cool or a warm skin tone," she said. "If your skin is more neutral, you're lucky, as you can wear just about any color you can think of."

Riniker said hair color works similarly when selecting the perfect shade of color for the face.

"There are warm and cool colors for hair color as well," she said. "Blondes can get away with sheerer colors, while those with darker hair should wear darker shades, because going to light can hide your eyes."

Other makeup suppliers said they see an increase in certain colors during different seasons, also.

"We sell a lot of purples in the winter months and a lot of jewel colors, such as plum," said Linda Chimiel, Clinique business manager at Dillard's. "As we head into spring, we'll see an increase in pastel colors."

Karen Kinast, Clinique beauty consultant, said any of these colors can work on just about anyone.

"Almost anyone can wear any shade," Kinast said. "The trick is to not go too light or too dark. If you do a dramatic, dark eye, go lighter on the lips to balance it out. The only difference an individual person would make is on what specific shade of a color they should wear."

Regardless of what color customers choose to wear, nothing will make them look their best without smooth, moisturized skin. It is no secret that dry skin is a problem many people combat in the colder months. However, most cosmetic lines carry products that can help skin hold moisture, no matter the skin type.

"We carry products for all ages and types," Kinast said of Clinique's products. "We're famous for our Three-Step System, which helps a lot with dry skin."

Kinast said the system consists of a face wash to get rid of oil and dirt, a clarifying lotion to get rid of dead skin cells and finally, a moisturizer to give skin that smooth, silky appearance.

"Dermatologists created these products for us in 1968 to give people in department stores similar products to what would be prescribed in their offices," Kinast said. "It's not the strength of prescription products but can give similar effects."

No matter what products consumers choose to keep their faces beautiful during the winter months, there is one secret that will always keep people smiling, Kinast said.

"There really are no rules to beauty, except to just wear whatever makes you feel confident."

Ballet features love story, own music

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The latest installment in the McCain performance series; the ballet "Giselle" will premier 7:30 p.m. Thursday in McCain Auditorium.

The St. Petersburg Ballet Theatre will give the performance.

Though this isn't the first ballet to be part of the McCain Performance series, it is said to be different from others, as it is a "storybook ballet," said Thom Jackson, assistant director of McCain. This type of ballet incorporates music and dancing along with a full-length story.

The story involves a prince (impersonating a peasant) who falls in love with a woman, Giselle. The prince has been betrothed to another woman and, when Giselle finds out she cannot marry him, she dies of a broken heart, Jackson said.

After she dies, her soul goes to a place out in the woods called the Willies: a dark wooded area where other women who have had their heart broken go after they die.

Once in the Willies, ladies bring in the gentleman whom Giselle was in love with. These jilted ladies' purpose in life is to drive their lost lovers insane, eventually killing them, Jackson said.

"You have betrayal, and you have lust and passion, and you have a supernatural-type of effect going on," Jackson said. "It really is a brilliant story."

It's also one of the very first ballets that had music was written specifically for the ballet.

"In the past, people would choreograph dances to music that had already been composed," Jackson said. "It is the opposite in this case. The music was specifically composed for the ballet."

McCain is only responsible for providing the sound, lights and a place for the group to perform.

"We are what's called a roadhouse or a performance facility, so we bring in road companies," Jackson said.

KING'S KITCHEN

Fast-food taste without the cholesterol problems

When I was a little tyke, unlike a lot of kids, my parents rarely took me to McDonald's for a Happy Meal. As I grew older and got my driver's license, the joys of the golden arches started to call my name. Before school, after school or after practice — anytime was burger time for me. Almost once a day I would enjoy my favorite, the Double Quarter Pounder with cheese and a large Coca-Cola.

All the glorious meals were brought to a screeching halt toward the end of my senior year of high school. Apparently, being skinny doesn't keep the old nemesis, Mr. High Cholesterol, away. My test results were through the roof.

After a verbal tongue lashing from my mother about my eating habits and family history, I was given a choice — take medication or change my eating habits. Even though I will most likely have to take medicine in the future, I figured I would at least try to change my eating habits first. Changing my diet has been difficult but it's better than taking medicine for the rest of my life.

My body adjusted well to not having fast food; however, when I am on the go, fast food can sometimes be the only quick option available. Though those meals taste wonderful, a few hours later, I generally feel sicker than a dog because of the preservatives and quality of the meat.

With my love of Double Quarter Pounders in mind, I developed a casserole with all the flavor of a McDonald's burger that doesn't clog the arteries as much.

NOT SO FAST-FOOD CHEESEBURGER CASSEROLE

Don't be cheap on the macaroni and cheese; usually I would go with the off-brand, but in this case it is a necessity to have the Kraft brand. Prepare the macaroni according to the box. Cook noodles for 8 minutes, then drain. Add cheese powder (from box), milk and margarine. Stir until thoroughly mixed and set aside.

By the way, I am well aware the box gives directions for a healthier version with fewer calories and fat, but old habits die hard. In my opinion, many of those "healthier" versions are less tasty. Food should be enjoyed — not taste like sawdust.

Before starting on the meat, pre-heat the oven to 450 degrees. In large sauté pan, begin browning the ground beef. While meat is browning, add onions, Italian seasoning, Worcestershire sauce and a dash of salt and pepper. Once the meat is browned, drain in

- 1 white onion, diced small
- 1 Tablespoon Italian seasoning
- 1 Tablespoon Worcestershire sauce
- Salt
- Pepper
- 2 whole tomatoes, diced (or 1 14.5 ounce can of diced tomatoes, drained)
- Ketchup
- Mustard
- Pickles
- 2 cups of Mild Cheddar cheese, divided into thirds
- 2 cups of Colby/Monterey Jack Cheese, combined bag, divided into thirds strainer and set aside.

Spread macaroni and cheese evenly across the bottom of 9-inch-by-13-inch glass casserole dish. Sprinkle half of the meat mixture on top of the macaroni and cheese. Before we get too far in this recipe, remember that I made this with the toppings I prefer on my burgers. If there is a condiment you like or don't like, feel free to add or leave it out.

Sprinkle a third of Mild Cheddar and third of Colby/Monterey Jack cheeses on top of the meat. Add one diced tomato, or half a can, depending on which you prefer. Layer pickles over the tomato chunks, and spread ketchup and mustard across the top in a criss-cross pattern.

Repeat previous process to make second layer. Once second layer is complete, top with remaining third of cheese. Bake casserole at 450 degrees for 15-20 minutes or until cheese is fully melted.

This dish will be very hot when it comes out of the oven. Let it cool for five minutes and serve. Typically, this meal produces a lot of leftovers, which can last for about a week.

The complete fan's guide: surviving the KU game

Plan on braving the elements for the perfect seat at the 2008 edition of the Sunflower Showdown? This survival guide should help you better endure whatever Mother Nature and Father Time plan to throw your way.

The most important thing is to keep yourself at least somewhat occupied, especially if you're planning on arriving right at 6 a.m. Wednesday morning. It's going to be a long day standing and waiting for tipoff, but it's KU, and it's time to break the streak.

— Compiled by Joe Bergkamp | COLLEGIAN

ENTERTAINMENT

Besides the weather, the one factor which is going to be troublesome is the long hours of standing in one place. Remember chairs of any kind are not a good idea because you'll have to leave them outside of Bramlage when you go in.

It would be wise to try and go with as many friends as you can, that way you won't be bored senseless by noon. Since you'll probably be in one place the majority of the time, you should be able to amuse yourself with card games or something that can pass the time. Bringing music to listen to is also a way to relax during the waiting process. Maybe the best idea is to keep yourself warm chatting it up with your peers. Good topics of conversation could include the KU rivalry.

Newspapers, books, magazines and even lecture notes can help make the day go faster as well. Bring several newspapers, read them or do the crosswords and sudokus and then recycle them during KU's player introductions.

WEATHER

The parking lots will open at 6 a.m. today. The forecast for Wednesday looks to be a little more wintery than the weather we've been spoiled with lately. Although the Weather Channel predicts for a high of only 42 degrees, it should be sunny throughout and there's no chance of precipitation scheduled.

You're going to have to put up with some strong winds throughout the day, which will make the 42 degrees seem much colder, especially if you're planning on being one of the first in line at the crack of dawn. If that's the case, expect temperatures below 20 degrees.

DRESS

This one should be obvious. How much purple can you physically get on your body? Just make sure it's enough to keep you protected from the weather, and remember any bag you bring can be searched upon entering Bramlage Coliseum. Ballard's Sporting Goods, 1218 Moro St., will be printing purple T-shirts with BEAT KU on them for $9.95.

FOOD

There are some businesses in Manhattan that will deliver food to Bramlage if that's the route you want to take. Other than that, bringing your own grab-bag is the only way to go. Just remember that you're not allowed to take any food or drinks into Bramlage once the gates are open. Also, just a reminder that alcohol is prohibited on the grounds. This includes while you're standing in line outside.

Wildcat freshman say they are ready for 1st Sunflower Showdown

By Joe Bergkamp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The year was 1983. Reaganomics were in full swing. The Police were No. 1 on the Billboard Charts. Sally Ride became the first U.S. woman in space, and the K-State Wildcats defeated their arch-rival, Kansas 58-57 in Manhattan.

Fast forward to 2008 where things are hardly the same in the Little Apple or at K-State in general. Yet one thing has withstood the test of 25 years — the winning streak the Jayhawks seem unwilling to relinquish. Even moving to a new venue has not willed any successful attempts at knocking off the Jayhawks in Manhattan. Many players have come and gone during that time, but maybe none so highly regarded as this year's freshman class, which includes guard Jacob Pullen, forward Michael Beasley and redshirt forward Bill Walker.

Up to this point in the season, no game has received more hype, and the young players will try not to let the atmosphere dictate the game negatively.

"I just do the same things I do for any other game," Pullen said. "I want to get in there and help out the team. I don't want to put any extra pressure on myself or anybody else. In the end, it's still a Big 12 game, and we want to win all of our conference games."

"In this case it just happens to be a rivalry game, and that makes you want to win that much more. It kind of reminds me of [rivalry] games I played in back in high school. It's two schools close by each other that just don't like each other."

This might be the Chicago native's first experience with the Sunflower Showdown, but it isn't his first time meeting fellow Chicago prep-star Sheron Collins, a guard for the Jayhawks.

"We played a few times in high school in park leagues, so I know him and his game, but our high schools never played, so it's just a basketball relationship," Pullen said.

Walker was in Manhattan last year for all of Big 12 Conference play, but had to watch the match-ups against Kansas from the bench after suffering from an anterior cruciate ligament tear after six games in his first season.

"I like playing in games like this," Walker said. "It's what I signed up for. It forces you to do one of two things: Either rise to the occasion or fall."

So much of Kansas' success this season has come from being able to determine how the game is played, and these two Wildcats are definitely aware of this.

"We have to keep it close all the way through, defensively play perfectly, help each other out on the glass, and just make it into a track meet," Walker said.

On the same subject, Pullen said Kansas' talent should not affect the way the Wildcats play.

"They're a really good basketball team, they have great guard play, they do all the things it takes to win games, but we can't let what they do affect the way we execute," he said. "At the end of the game we just have to have one more point than they do."

Anybody who cheers for the Wildcats is familiar with this rivalry, and the streak in general and the players have heard about the 24-year winless drought in Manhattan.

"This is a big time rivalry, and we'll be up for it," Pullen said. "People have been telling us all about how we haven't ever beat Kansas in Bramlage, and that's definitely one thing we want to accomplish this season. People also said we'd never gone into Colorado undefeated [in Big 12 play] and come out the same way. We're just trying to keep setting records."

Jan. 30, 2008, is certainly shaping up to be one of — if not the biggest — Sunflower Showdowns since 1988 when K-State and KU matched up in the Elite Eight round of the NCAA Tournament. Adding even more drama to the setting, is that this is only the fourth time in history that both K-State and KU have met while both were undefeated in conference play, with K-State going 2-1 in the previous three meetings. The 25 years since K-State was able to outlast Kansas at home has been anything but pleasant for the purple faithful, but a win in Manhattan tonight just might help ease their suffering. A win by K-State in Bramlage Coliseum would certainly not be anything short of monumental for the young squad, first-year head coach Frank Martin said.

"A lot of people in purple have been dying to see a win here, and us being able to be the first to do that would be huge, not only for us but especially for the fans," Walker said.

This could be year to knock off KU

For years now, as a devoted and semi-obsessive K-State fan, I have been wishing, predicting, and at times, guaranteeing a Wildcat win in the annual Sunflower Showdown in Bramlage Coliseum. Many of those guarantees were made back in my grade-school days when I was not as knowledgeable on the topic, but I, like many others, crave for Kansas' streak of 24 winning years in Manhattan to come to an end.

It is not only one of the more impressive and just utterly ridiculous streaks in collegiate athletics but also in the vast world of sports. A visiting opponent winning 24 consecutive times on your home court is something you do not even see at the high-school level very often.

I did some quick, crude mathematic calculations to show the severity of this streak — as if we all weren't well aware. Approximately 340,000 tickets have been sold to the Sunflower Showdown in Manhattan since 1984. Now the heart-wrenching, tear-jerking aspect of this is all those tickets were sold to watch the Wildcats eventually lose and crush the hopes of fans who thought we might possibly beat our arch-rival Kansas.

Take a minute to let that soak in, and think about all the K-State fans who have cheered, yelled and supported their Wildcats over the past quarter century, in what we should have figured would be an eventual losing effort. Over 300,000 K-State fans continually held out hope that "this might be the year!" or "this is the year!" Annually, we show up in masses to wait in line for hours and then suffer the same depressing outcome.

This evening though, it might be different. This evening, as roughly 13,000 more K-State ticket-holders file into Bramlage Coliseum, they will come to witness arguably the best player in the nation, freshman forward Michael Beasley, take on one of the best teams in the nation. Beasley, who is five years younger than the streak that haunts us all, guaranteed a victory over the Jayhawks way back in summer 2007.

Now, was Beasley trying to do his best Ron Prince, "bold and daring" impersonation, or was he being as truthful and genuine in the statement as a person can be? We might never know the answer to that, but judging by the play of this young man and his unbelievable ability to will himself above and beyond the opponent, I'm taking his statement to the bank.

Yes, if the Wildcats can stay grounded tonight and not get too caught up in the hoopla of the Sunflower Showdown, Beasley and fellow freshman forward Bill Walker should lead the Wildcats to a win over Kansas at home. Beasley is that good, and the supporting cast is finally good enough to put the Wildcats over the top.

Bring your nonmarking, black-soled shoes to the game, Wildcat fans, because tonight we're going to be stepping onto that gym court when the buzzer sounds. Also, President Wefald, if you are reading this, please consider canceling classes on Thursday. After all, the Naval Academy did after their first football victory over Notre Dame in nearly a half century. No one can seriously assume students, and some faculty and staff, will be in any capacity to make it to class.

Enjoy the night Wildcat fans, wear your purple, yell your lungs out, and remember, no matter what the outcome is, it's always a great day to be a Wildcat.

K-State ends 25-game losing streak to KU at home

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Michael Beasley called it. The freshman forward made the bold prediction in summer 2007: K-State would be victorious in Bramlage Coliseum against Kansas for the first time in 25 years. Victorious the Wildcats were, dismantling No. 2 Kansas 84-75 Wednesday. "People act like there's only one basketball team in Kansas," freshman forward Bill Walker said. "We just had a chance to show that there isn't. It was a big win. I just remember going on those Catbacker tours and listening to those people in Garden City, Kan., and all the other places I went. All they wanted was to beat KU. After Mike promised the win, I felt like we had nothing to lose."

Beasley fought the oppressive defense of KU's senior center Sasha Kaun and battled his way to 25 points, including four baskets from beyond the arc. He was not the only K-State player who scored at least 20 points. He was joined by Walker, who had 22 points, and freshman guard Jacob Pullen, who had 20 points.

"K-State was a better team than we were tonight," said Kansas coach Bill Self. "You could say it was because of defense or offense. Obviously, they can play more than two terrific players. Pullen was excellent tonight."

The usual suspects were strong for the Jayhawks. Junior guard Mario Chalmers had 19 points, junior guard Brandon Rush had 15 and both sophomore forward Darrell Arthur and sophomore guard Sherron Collins had 12. However, because of the rowdy Bramlage crowd, Self said the KU guards weren't as effective.

"We will not play in an environment like this again this year," he said. "There will be some other good ones we go to, but this was fabulous. I couldn't even hear the whistle blow. Our guards probably didn't communicate as well as possible to get everyone on the same page."

With the victory, K-State improves to 15-4 on the season

A low roar could be heard blocks away from Aggieville Wednesday night. Hundreds of K-State fans rushed to the bars to begin celebrating immediately after the 84-75 victory against the University of Kansas, braving the cold weather.

Two men walking toward the bars were discussing the cold and one said "Jager would make it warm."

Yelling fans who already had a head start on those who attended the game packed the business district.

One of those fans was confident that K-State would prevail before the game started.

"I thought we'd be OK, as long as we stay out of foul trouble," said

Jared Strathman, senior in criminology. "I waited 25 years, and it's finally over; I've been waiting for this since before I was born."

Strathman and a few of his friends added in unison, "John Welfald, cancel class tomorrow because we're not goin'!"

This message to our president was accompanied by a random fan climbing up a light pole to announce to the world his feelings about KU.

Heavy drinking ensued while many fans were still in awe at the long-awaited win.

"It was awesome. [Michael Beasley] started off slow, but pretty much had his way in the second half," said Matt Whitney, junior in marketing.

He said he was going to get drunk, and said that Wednesday night was the best night of his life.

Campus leaders discuss candidates

By Eric Davis

Young voters were given the chance to hear the platforms of the presidential candidates at a forum in the K-State Student Union Courtyard on Tuesday afternoon.

Delta Sigma Theta Inc. organized the event to educate the student body on main issues of the presidential race and also the viewpoints of the front-running candidates.

"[Delta Sigma Theta] focuses on political awareness and involvement," said Julian Todd, senior in kinesiology. "We just figured that since the election is coming up it would be a good idea to inform people about the candidates."

George Weston, graduate student in sociology, and Aaron Apel, senior in philosophy, were joined on stage by former Kansas Gov. John Carlin. Weston is the current president of the K-State College Republicans and Apel is the current president of the K-State Young Democrats.

Weston supported the platforms of Mitt Romney, John McCain and Mike Huckabee and answered questions from the crowd regarding the candidates' stances.

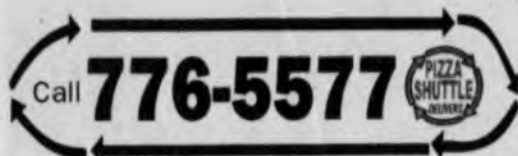

McCain has the best war record of any of the Republican candidates, Weston said, and was a prisoner of the Vietnam War for a large part of the war.

"During more than five and half years as a [prisoner of war], John McCain experienced the worst assaults on human dignity imaginable," Weston said.

Weston also said McCain's experiences in the camp

Police department incorporates new missing child alert system

By Brandi Brumback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Police Department recently has subscribed to a national organization that will assist in its efforts to locate missing persons.

"A Child is Missing" works with law-enforcement agencies all over the country, providing free assistance in recovering missing individuals including children, teens and the elderly. The nonprofit program is used by about 3,000 law enforcement agencies.

When the RCPD takes a missing persons report, they can call ACIM and provide the necessary information about the individual. ACIM makes an automated message containing the supplied information, then creates a database of surrounding area phone numbers dependent upon the location where the person was last seen. The recorded message is played to local residents and businesses.

The program activates in less than 10 minutes and generates 1,000 phone calls per minute, said ACIM Founder Sherry Friedlander.

ACIM continues working with the officer or department until the person has been found. The program is designed to help locate people who might truly be missing and because of their age, mental or physical condition, could be in danger if not quickly located.

According to achildsmissing.org, the organization has a record of 315 safe recoveries.

There are certain cases in which ACIM might not be used, but Friedlander said because of the program's broader scope, it can be used in instances when a state's Amber Alert Program cannot.

"This is the only program of its kind in the country," Friedlander said.

The RCPD has not needed to use the service yet, but they are hopeful the service will be instrumental to their investigations in the future, said RCPD Lt. Richard Fink.

"There are past situations where it would have been helpful," Fink said.

Student Senate to vote on fee increase

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A $10,000 increase in the K-State Student Union Operations Budget privilege fee will be discussed tonight at the Student Senate meeting.

Student Senate also will vote on a resolution to support the K-State PROUD campaign.

Following the final action vote are 15 items of new legislation, including four commendations to individuals and groups, according to the agenda.

Chris Sorensen, distinguished professor of physics, received the 2007 National Professor of the Year award, and David Littrell, distinguished professor of music, received the 2007 Kansas Professor of the Year award. Both professors are on the agenda to be commended for their achievements, as well as the family of former student body president Kyle Barker who died Dec. 19, 2007, and the recipients of the K-State Hero awards.

Also on the agenda is a declaration of the week of Feb. 4-8 as "SafeRide Week," in honor of the SafeRide program's 100,000th passenger.

Senators will discuss revisions in the academic calendar. The one-day fall break will be eliminated and a week-long Thanksgiving break will take its place in the academic year of 2010 if the resolution passes.

"It would be better for traveling," said Lydia Peele, student body vice president.

"For a lot of students it makes a lot more sense to have a week off. We have a week for spring break so we might as well have a week in the fall."

Four allocations to different student organizations are listed at the bottom of the new legislation.

The K-State 4-H club is asking for $500 to attend a conference in Denver.

The K-State Interfraternity Council requested $800 to attend a leadership conference in Chicago.

The K-State Juggling Club requested $783.05 to rent space for the Little Apple Juggling Festival in late February.

An allocation of $900 to the K-State Panhellenic Council to attend a leadership conference in Chicago also will be voted on, according to the agenda.

"Any registered student organization that is open to all students can apply for funding," Peele said.

Fans brave cold outside of Bramlage, hoping to witness historic K-State-KU game

By Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"K-S-U Wildcats" and other chants were heard through the day as freezing fans waited in line for the game to begin.

Fans waited in below-freezing temperatures in hopes of witnessing the first K-State victory against University of Kansas in Bramlage Coliseum.

Eric Zwygart, sophomore in computer science, was dressed in a purple suit to cheer on the Cats.

"I wear this suit for special games; gotta support the team - that's why I wore it today," Zwygart said.

Zwygart, who was among the many fans waiting outside Bramlage, said he thought the team had grown and had potential to win.

"I want to see the guys play as a team," he said. "If we play like a team, we will win."

Tired and cold fans were surprised to see members of the basketball team come to show their support to the fans by giving people pizza at about 3 p.m.

Megan Shippers, sophomore in biology, said having the basketball team bring pizza was a good way to get involved with the crowd, as well as excite the fans.

"For the players to come out was exciting," Shippers said. "It was a grade-A experience."

Schippers said she felt confident in the team because they are good and have won big games.

"We will win, I have confidence," Schippers said.

TO THE POINT

KSU ends 25-year streak

It's over.

After nearly a quarter of a century of losing in Manhattan, the Wildcats finally beat their in-state rival on their home court. It was seriously one of the most embarrassing streaks in all of sports.

But it does not matter anymore. It's over. Wildcat nation can move on.

K-State didn't just beat an average KU team. The Wildcats won convincingly against a Jayhawk squad that many people were calling the best KU team in 20 years.

There's no doubt this K-State team is something special. They didn't just beat the No. 2 team in the country, they made it look fairly easy. The Wildcats led for most of the game and never trailed by more than four points.

Hopefully, we will see more of this K-State team that we've been watching during the Big 12 Conference season. It would be a shame if the Wildcats followed up one of the biggest wins in K-State history with a few losses.

We don't want the basketball team to experience the same downward spiral that the football team has had after beating Texas the last two years.

No matter what though, this is a great day to be a Wildcat. Soak it up K-State fans. You've earned it. It's over.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Strapped down

Moderate claim is excuse to remain politically idle

In the 1964 presidential election, Republican candidate Barry Goldwater said, "... Extremism in the defense of liberty is no vice ... moderation in the pursuit of justice is no virtue."

He was right, though the vast majority of Americans believe the opposite. According to a 2007 study conducted by Harvard University's Institute of Politics, 40 percent of college students define themselves as being politically moderate. And in most places, this is considered to be a good stance. Merriam-Webster Dictionary defines moderate as "keeping within reasonable or proper limits; not extreme, excessive or intense." This definition seems fair enough and reasonably encompasses what many Americans think about themselves.

But the dictionary goes on to describe moderate as being synonymous with "mediocre." I find this to hold the truer connotation when discussing moderation in politics.

The trouble with moderate politics is that the focus becomes appeasement of the majority rather than the honest pursuit of ideals. Instead of attempting to make changes for the betterment of our nation, moderate politics strive to maintain the status quo. In other words, moderate politics lead to mediocre social policy – and that isn't good enough.

Too often, the minority opinion is shunted to the side because of the desire of the public to avoid a debate. Society shies away from the political dog fight and instead favors the middle-of-the-road opinion that doesn't push any limits. Social progress will never occur as long as everyone flees to the middle and stays well within the proverbial box. For too long now, social policy in the United States has been at a standstill. We move neither forward nor backward nor side to side, all in an effort to avoid making anyone unhappy.

Some of the greatest changes in our nation's history have been implemented by what would have been considered extremist ideologies. The end of slavery, the civil rights movement and women's suffrage never would have occurred in a moderate political climate. Great social progress, historically, has been made only by the far ends of the political spectrum. The very founding of our nation was based on the ideas of what would today be considered the equivalent of a terrorist group.

Today, the sentiment seems to be that moderate politics will bring the country together on issues. Choose the middle road, and political divisiveness will come to an end. Unfortunately, political and social progress will also come to an end. If we agree to disagree on everything, where exactly does that leave us on issues like gay rights? Or abortion? The war in Iraq? These are issues that require solutions – solutions that only will be found through fierce political debate.

Playing video games while avoiding world issues helps no one

The K-State Collegian editorial on illegal immigration and disease by Brigitte Brecheisen on Sept. 11, 2007, brought up a much-needed reminder and discussion of the necessity of continually evolving and engaged thinking skills.

It was refreshing to see people who were, for the most part, civilly engaging in discussion about an important issue like immigration. It can be very frustrating to see peers caring more about the local drink specials than issues involving real people in real places. As individuals, we are usually ignorant about issues that matter.

As a nation, we don't think anymore. The accessibility of television and online entertainment has wasted our time and filled our minds with non-engaging and mostly worthless content, and it shows in our priorities. With all the information stimuli we receive every day, the important issues get lumped in with the trivial, and we become indifferent to it all. We become apathetic.

Why become engaged with my world and surroundings when I can sit in my apartment and press buttons on a 12-inch plastic guitar? When we value the wrong aspects, the quality of our lives and those of our neighbors are greatly affected.

For example, I found it disappointing when a much higher number of people showed up to watch a football game than went to hear former president Bill Clinton speak at Bramlage Coliseum on important and relevant issues of our times. I find it telling when Britney Spears' performance at the Video Music Awards gets more of the population's attention than General Petraeus' assessment of the situation in Iraq. I also find it ironic that when our country is bordering on a major financial and credit crisis, Heath Ledger takes up most of the media's time.

In her May 29, 2006, article in The Scotsman, Jacqui Goddard wrote, "Ronald Reagan set a record when he received 54.5 million votes to claim the United States presidency in 1984. In 2004, George Bush broke it with nearly 62 million under his belt.

"But in a new indicator of just how seriously America takes its elections – or, perhaps, how seriously it takes the post of president – a gray-haired soul singer from Alabama has eclipsed both by scooping an unprecedented 63.4 million votes to claim a far loftier title: the new American Idol."

Another indicator of America's lost priorities is the lack of interest in books. I always have to shake my head when I hear people say, "Oh, I don't read," like that is acceptable behavior.

According to an Associated Press survey last month, one in every four Americans did not read a single book in 2006. In a 2004 report called "Reading at Risk," a survey by the National Endowment for the Arts reported only 57 percent of American adults had read a book in 2002, a drop in 4 percentage points since the 1990s. The study faulted TV, movies and the Internet.

We like our information to be quick and instantaneous. Media do not like books that require a substantial amount of time to read and understand they are not popular in this age of fast food and three-and-a-half-minute Top-40 singles. Important subjects that define our world like poverty and immigration cannot be relegated to a 30-second news clip.

"When the story of these times gets written, we want it to say that we did all we could, and it was more than anyone could have imagined," said Bono, lead singer of rock band U2.

We have the resources and ability to greatly enable ourselves and our global neighbors to live better and happier lives. We just need to take the time to care about the issues of our world and then step out and do something about them.

Folk pop pair releases 3rd album, continues local shows

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pam Beihl and Bree Heitman have known each other more than 10 years, but recently the word "finally" took a new meaning in their lives.

Beihl and Heitman, also known as Fashionably Late, released their third full-length album "Finally" in fall 2007 through Arnold Sound. As it suggests, the album's name represents a 12-track product that took a long time for completion, Heitman said.

Fashionably Late, a folk-pop duo, features songwriter Beihl on lead vocals and acoustic guitar with Heitman on piano and backup vocals.

"It's an easier sound, but it's original," Heitman said. "I'm classically trained, so there's definitely that element on the piano."

Beihl and Heitman first met at their church's choir rehearsal and formed their first band Beihl and Hedman, which was Heitman's maiden name. The pair teamed up with a drummer and bassist to form The Big Idea in 2001. After The Big Idea broke up, the women got back together and formed Fashionably Late.

Fashionably Late has performed at bars, coffee shops, street corners, living rooms, backyards and lakeside, but as its MySpace page declares: "Fashionably Late plays locally, drinks globally."

A two-person band does limit and challenge its musical capabilities, Heitman said. She said Fashionably Late often opens for other bands "because people usually like to rock out a little bit more at the end of the evening."

"With the two of you, it's more stripped down," Heitman said. "We like to stick with the acoustic sound, and the nice part about that is that it's simple. It's more unique that your four-piece and five-piece bands out there."

Heitman said most musicians who perform with Fashionably Late typically support its sound because Beihl and Heitman perform strongly on their instruments.

"Musically, I think our message is using a lot of different chord progressions — we're into complexity," Heitman said. "Message-wise, we try to involve the audience. In between, we try to kid around about stuff that's happened to us and try to get people to laugh."

Both women emphasized the importance of making a connection with audience members during live performances. Beihl said college is a time in peoples' lives when they learn about life experiences and situations they would not think about elsewhere. Fashionably Late's music relates with college students in its differences among today's other musical performers, she said.

"I think our stuff isn't necessarily run-of-the-mill," Beihl said. "It doesn't sound like anything you're going to hear on the radio; I'd like to think it's a little more thoughtful. I think that's something to offer them."

"Moonshooter" is Heitman's Fashionably Late personal favorite song because it talks about reaching farther than a person ever dreamed possible. The song was recorded in

All Faiths Chapel on a Steinway piano and features only Beihl on vocals.

"For me, college was about reaching out far, and we all need someone to tell us we can be whatever we want to be," Heitman said.

With Beihl soon moving to Kansas City, Kan., and Heitman living in Tonganoxie, Kan., Heitman said Fashionably Late aims to expand its performances to Lawrence and the greater-Kansas-City area.

However, Manhattan still is considered home, Heitman said, and Fashionably Late's Aggieville performances will continue despite the move.

"It'd be great someday if we could continue to play and break into a fan base, but I think we're more realistic than that," Heitman said with a laugh about the group's future. "It's a great balance with our work lives."

Lying can be best way to keep conversations interesting, alive

How do you keep a conversation going?

Lie. Lie your ass off. Lie till it hurts. Lie till you can't help but burst out laughing and walk away.

Actually it all depends on who you're conversing with. Is this someone you're interested in? Is it a coworker? Is it a stranger even, and you don't know why you're talking to them? It all depends on the person you're dealing with.

If you're interested in the person, just shut up and listen. Really that's all there is to it. Listen and respond; don't think. A lot of the time, we're talking to people, we hear a story from them or a thought, and we immediately begin replaying through our head a similar occurrence in our own lives, and we belt it out the first chance we get.

What you have to realize is the person talking to us isn't trying to open up a particular genre of life experiences for us all to relate to and expound. Rather, they're telling us something about themselves, something they want us to know about them, something that holds meaning in their life.

Turn your brain off for a while and take everything in. Though if you really do like this person, it should come naturally.

Co-workers are a different story. They're a trip. No matter what happens during the conversation, you will see them again. There's no way around that. Now when my co-workers start talking about the "pieces" who were out at the bars last night, or they try explaining for the 99th time why they own a halfway house for cats, I just walk away. Those are conversations I just don't feel the need to be a part of.

When it comes down to co-workers, I just lie. I lie a lot. There's really only a handful of people who know the real me, and even those people I lie to. It's almost second nature now.

Take old people for instance. I don't know what it is, but something about my face says to them, "Hey, this kid really cares about what I have to say." I'm not kidding. They flock to me.

Just today on my way home from work two came up to me, "Hey, sonny, how about ..." I took off running before they could finish. It's almost gotten to the point where I feel like a stranger walking down a dark alley in St. Louis, avoiding eye contact so no one approaches me.

I just can't do it anymore. They come up to me all the time with their questions and their hey-did-you-know's, and I just lie and lie and lie. It's incredibly draining.

"Oh, really, what was that like?" I might ask and then immediately kick myself for doing so.

So how do you keep a conversation going? Just like bad sex, fake it.

Football team sports impressive recruiting class

The K-State football team is less than a week away from welcoming in its 2008 recruiting class, and I couldn't be more impressed with what the coaching staff has accomplished the last couple weeks.

National Signing Day is like a second Christmas for college football coaches across the country, and K-State could have one of its best recruiting classes I have seen. At least 30 are projected to sign letters of intent Feb. 6, according to GoPowercat.com.

The recruiting business is somewhat of a gamble, you either do well, or you don't. I have seen everything from amazing stories like former K-State running back Darren Sproles to huge busts like Marvin Simmons.

In fact, Sproles was so underrated in the recruiting process that KU told him he was too small. He certainly showed them they made a poor choice after he watched quarterback Eli Roberson run for a long touchdown in the spring game and committed on the spot to K-State. Sproles only went on to be the all-time Big 12 Conference leader, as well as No. 6 on the NCAA career list, with 6,812 all-purpose yards.

As for Simmons, well, he didn't do much of anything except fall asleep on the floor in the World Regional Geography class I had with him.

A lot of people who watched the Wildcats struggle to a 5-7 record in 2007 blame it on the new 3-4 defensive scheme. The change was for the best, but everyone needs to understand the Wildcats didn't have all the right pieces in the system to be successful. I believe this year's class will bring out the defensive results fans have been wanting.

One of the most important positions in a 3-4 defense is the nose tackle. This player is in the middle of a three-man front line and is in charge of taking up space. The Wildcats were relatively small at this position last year and have looked to the junior-college ranks for much needed help.

Football recruits are labeled with stars by recruiting sites to represent prospective talent levels. The least amount of stars is one and the most is five. The Wildcats have three potential immediate contributors next season in this recruiting class.

Four-star defensive tackle Daniel Calvin committed to the Wildcats after taking a campus visit and watching the Iowa State basketball game. The 6-foot-3, 322-pounder from Bakersfield, Calif., will be thrust into the role of being the run-stuffer in the middle. The only way Calvin will not be the prized recruit is if five-star defensive end Simi Kuli from Torrance, Calif., commits to K-State soon.

Two three-star players, tackle Tony Gillespie from Jenks, Okla., and junior-college transfer John Finau, a tackle from Torrance, Calif., will also add much needed depth to a position that is so crucial to this scheme's success. If anything, these defensive line recruits are a big step in the right direction.

Of course, teams need more than one player to be successful. It is obvious the team needs to fill some gaping holes, and I believe this recruiting class has the pieces to get the Wildcats to where they need to be next season.

and is now the only undefeated team in the Big 12 Conference in league play, netting their sixth victory in a row and tenth in the last 11 games. KU fell to 20-1 on the year and 5-1 in conference play.

K-State led by two at halftime, but KU quickly tied it within 30 seconds of the start of the second half. K-State then began putting on the pressure and Beasley scored six quick points to put K-State up by six. K-State never lost the lead after that, extending it to 12 with 10 minutes left in regulation.

K-State controlled the tempo of the game throughout, forcing 15 turnovers.

"Our kids play real hard," coach Frank Martin said. "Our kids guard. They get after people. We've played pretty darn well defensively for about two months now. If we sped them up, we must have been doing something right. They don't get rattled so for us to be able to have effected their play, it's a credit to them."

When Walker dunked to extend the lead back to 10 with 38 seconds left, it began soaking into the 12,528 fans in Bramlage: the streak was over. They began crowding the aisles, waiting to rush the court. The crowd, who has been a factor in previous Big 12 games this season, was exceptionally loud Wednesday, Walker said.

"They were loud the whole game," he said. "My ears were ringing when I finally got back to the locker room. I think we've adjusted to playing in environments like that."

Though most K-State students and fans wouldn't agree, Beasley tried to convince everyone it was just one game on the schedule.

"It's just a game to me," he said. "It's my first time playing KU. I know it means a lot to the people around here. I knew my team was capable of beating anybody."

Sweat leads K-State past Nebraska with last-second layup

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LINCOLN, Neb. — K-State is feeling right at home on the road these days.

The 18th-ranked Wildcats ended another opponent's long home winning streak Wednesday night, overcoming their coach's ejection and Marlies Gipson's foul trouble to beat Nebraska 77-75 on Ashley Sweat's baseline drive with 7 seconds left.

K-State (15-5, 7-0) has won 10 straight after a 5-5 start and remains tied with Baylor for the Big 12 lead.

Five of the 10 wins have come on the road. The Wildcats ended Texas A&M's 26-game home win streak and 12-game home streaks belonging to Oklahoma State and Nebraska (15-6, 4-3).

"For this team, we can get down, we can be up, the crowd can be yelling at us. But we always find a way to come through and get a win," said Kimberly Dietz, who scored a season-high 26 points and hit a big 3-pointer in the final minute.

After Kelsey Griffin's putback for Nebraska had tied it at 75 with 36.6 seconds left, the Wildcats set up for the final shot.

Sweat took the ball along the baseline and dribbled right around Danielle Page to the basket for an easy layup with one second showing on the shot clock.

Page tried to swipe at Sweat's shot but missed.

"I wasn't really as close as I needed to be," Page said. "I shouldn't have let her beat me off the drive."

K-State coach Deb Patterson said Sweat showed great composure to work her way past Page.

"It was an individual not conceding," Patterson said. "It was a tough play. A lot of players would have given up on the ball-side block. She continued to the reverse and finished that play."

Nebraska had two good looks at the basket in the final seconds, but Yvonne Turner missed a driving layup and Griffin couldn't get a putback to fall.

"'Vonnie' took it and made a strong move to the basket, and I went back up with it, and it happened to rim out on me," Griffin said. "I could have focused better on the basket probably, but my adrenaline got going. I just missed it."

Patterson watched the final 8:03 on a television hung over a concession stand. The Wildcats' coach had been ejected after getting her second technical foul.

Nebraska's Turner had just stripped the ball from Shalee Lehning and was dribbling past halfcourt when Patterson apparently got out of line with the officials. Her first technical came in the opening half.

"I guess I was a little too emotional," Patterson said.

Lehning added 19 points, Gipson had 15 and Sweat added 10 for the Wildcats, who play for the conference lead at home Saturday against Baylor.

Danielle Page had 20 points and Griffin 19 to lead the Huskers.

Griffin's inside basket and three-point play put Nebraska up 68-66 with 4:30 left in a game that had seven ties and seven lead changes.

But Gipson, who sat down for nine minutes after committing her fourth foul, hit a baseline shot upon her return to tie it. Lehning hit two free throws and Dietz snaked her way through the lane for a layup to give K-State a 72-68 lead.

The Huskers were ahead again after Page's in-close basket and Turner's 3-pointer from the top of the key.

But Dietz answered with a 3 before Nebraska tied it again.

"To me, that was as big a shot as there was in the game," Patterson said. "She put us in position to be competitive the last few minutes of the game."

K-State's upset shows them as Big 12 contender

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State freshman forward Michael Beasley often refers to his team's achievements as stepping stones in the growth of the young team.

Wednesday's 84-75 upset of No. 2 Kansas might have been the biggest step the No. 22 Wildcats have made all season long.

"Every win is a stepping stone, a learning point for us freshman," Beasley said. "We are obviously a young team, but we have good wins under our belt. We just knocked off a Final-Four caliber team. It's a learning point."

While Beasley and freshman forward Bill Walker put in their typical contributions, it was freshman guard Jacob Pullen who put in the show — stealing performance of the night with 20 points and a 10-for-10 game at the free-throw line.

Pullen not only showed his individual maturity, but along with senior guards Clint Stewart and Blake Young, he displayed K-State's guard could play with anyone.

"I'm tired of people calling our guards raggedy," K-State coach Frank Martin said. "Our guards stepped up and they played like men today. I've got nine first-year guys that have grown up a hell of a whole lot since November."

The performance from Pullen was no surprise to Martin, who pointed out his freshman guard is toward the top of the Big 12 Conference in assist-to-turnover ratio with a ratio of 5-1.

"He has been doing it for two months," he said. "Today, because their bigs have to get out of the lane, it opened up some dribble drives for us, and Jacob played like a true champ."

The importance of Pullen's performance was expressed by his teammates after the game, including Walker who said the guard plays the toughest position on the court.

"I always tell [Pullen] his position is the hardest on the court, he has to know what everyone is doing," he said. "I just told him to 'get out there and forget the mistakes and just play,' and he came up big."

Complimenting Pullen was an effort from freshman forward Dominique Sutton who made the first start of his career and finished tied for the team lead in rebounding with Beasley at six.

Walker said the performance tonight was an example of how far this team has come in its overall growth.

"It's just guys getting used to playing against major competition," he said. "It's going to take a while for young guys to prepare for that, going hard every day and taking care of little things, and I think we are starting to do that."

K-State leads challenge

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Will Ferrell is asking K-State students to log onto Facebook.

On a video on the main page of funnyordie.com, Ferrell encourages students to add the Funny or Die application to their personal profile as a competition among the seven colleges on the Will Ferrell Funny or Die Comedy Tour Presented by Semi-Pro.

The tour stop with the most application adds will receive prizes, featuring a stuffed hammerhead shark signed by Ferrell and tour winner bragging rights.

K-State is in the lead for a competition among the seven tour stops – K-State has 47 percent of the applications, followed by Ohio State with 37 percent, according to the Web site.

"It is kinda [Ferrell's] own way to not only publicize the show, but it adds some competition between the colleges," said Courtney Hauser, entertainment co-chairwoman for UPC.

Hauser said she thinks students are serious about the competition.

"I think it would be awesome if we won it all since we are the first stop on the tour – it's all in good fun," she said.

The competition ends when Ferrell and fellow comedians Zach Galifianakis, Demetri Martin and Nick Swardson take the stage at 8 p.m. Feb. 4 in Bramlage Coliseum.

Ben Hopper, adviser for UPC, said the last couple of years they have wanted to bring in a big-name performer to K-State like Ferrell.

Ag econ teacher draws off energy from students

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ted Schroeder would tell you he is an average farm boy with nothing more to say. Looking at his ordinary white-walled office and the stacks of textbooks along his walls, one might believe him at first.

However, the few personal items tucked away in the corners of the room – a family photo, scenic pictures of the acreage he lives on, a Nebraska Huskers painted rock and a pair of running shoes – suggest there's more to this professor.

Schroeder, university distinguished professor of agricultural economics, has been at K-State for 20 years and teaches as many as three to four classes a year in the agricultural economics department.

"I think at the end of the day it's been a fun ride," he said. "The environment is very energetic and very supportive. It's a place where I feel I can accomplish the things I want to do."

Schroeder grew up on a family farm in Nebraska and places his family at the top of his list of interests and activities. Though he said he spends much of his time in the office, he said he likes to be outside running or working.

"Most of my life is spent reading and thinking, but my stronger preference is being active," he said.

At K-State, Schroeder said he spends 85 percent of his time conducting research and managing projects in the livestock and cattle market. It's the other 15 percent when he is in front of a classroom teaching that he said keeps him going.

"The education of people and especially students is the most enjoyable thing I do," he said. "It's one of the longest-lasting, influential contributions you'll ever make."

"It's getting to know the students, understanding their challenges, aspirations and then seeing them do things they didn't think they could do."

Teaching students isn't always something Schroeder wanted to do. In fact, he didn't have any intentions of teaching at all until in his final years in graduate school.

Besides not knowing what he wanted to do professionally, he said public speaking makes him nervous.

"My nature is I'm a farm boy," he said. "I'm very accustomed to being in the field by myself. People scare me. I'm anxious when I get up in front of people."

"It's something I have to deal with – it's adrenaline flow. The day that I don't walk into the classroom with a bit of internal anxiety is the day I'll quit teaching, and I'll know I'll have lost the zeal."

Schroeder laughed, remembering the first time he had to get up in front of 250 students to teach while he was in graduate school.

"I was petrified," he said. "I was afraid I was going to tell them everything I knew for the entire semester in the first lecture. ... what do you teach the rest of the weeks?"

Schroeder said the energy he gets from his students makes him enjoy his job and look forward to coming to work each day.

"It's so contagious," he said. "You know, I'm an old guy now, and I still feel very vibrant."

Schroeder said he doesn't consider himself a typical academic because he has never had a dream to be a teacher, researcher or professor. He just always looks for the most exciting path to follow and "runs hard for a while."

"At the end of the day what I'm trying to do is be a valued faculty member in this – first – department; second, college; third, university," he said. "That means that I'm resourceful and helpful and relevant to students, and that I'm doing things that somebody cares about on the research side."

FACULTY FEATURE

Lisle Alderton | COLLEGIAN

Ted Schroeder is a university distinguished professor of agricultural economics. Schroeder still gets anxious when he speaks in front of his classes, but he said it is the energy from the students that gives him an adrenaline rush and makes his job enjoyable every day.

VOTERS | Former Kan. governor talks politics

and his lifelong dedication to public service are what make him a good candidate for the presidency.

Apel gave the positions of Hillary Clinton, Barack Obama and John Edwards and also answered questions.

Apel said all the front-running Democratic candidates want to immediately reduce troop levels in Iraq, but all have different strategies of what to do after the levels are reduced.

Carlin, who was governor of Kansas from 1979-1987, urged all college students to become more active, especially in the upcoming election.

"If the younger generation does not become a force in the political process, generally speaking, [politicians] will continue to put off addressing the massive issues that require a lot of risk and long-term [work] to get accomplished," Carlin said.

"I can assure you that the politicians and the candidates will turn on a dime when you become a force in the electorate. As long as you are the part of the electorate that participated the least, you're not going to be a force."

The event's organizers were pleased to see Carlin talk with students and not at them.

"I was really surprised at how well John Carlin spoke and how he made it relevant to us," said Carmen Richardson, junior in agriculture business and member of Delta Sigma Theta.

Overall, members from Delta Sigma Theta were pleased with the way students responded to the idea of the forum, Todd said.

Delta Sigma Theta Incorporated organized a political forum Tuesday afternoon in the K-State Student Union Courtyard. Former Kansas Gov. John Carlin was also at the forum.

Search continues in missing girl case

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Police are still looking for a 15-year-old Manhattan High School student who went missing Monday, according to police reports.

A Riley County Police Department release reported Shirley Stockton was last seen Monday after she was dropped off at school, but she did not attend classes.

At about 1 p.m. later that day, Stockton's cell phone was found at the scenic overlook on K-177 in Riley County. Stockton's family then reported her as a missing/run-away juvenile.

According to the report, Stockton might have planned the disappearance.

She might be traveling to Lemoore, Calif., or Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Stockton is described as a white female about 5-feet-4 inches tall, weighing approximately 115 pounds. She was last seen wearing a black suede-looking coat with a hood, a light blue shirt, blue jeans and white tennis shoes with blue stripes on the side and carrying a red Nike backpack, according to police reports.

Michele Jones, communications coordinator for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, said the school district is asking that anyone who knows anything about the whereabouts of Stockton report it.

"If anyone, students or in the community, knows anything, we do encourage them to talk with RCPD," Jones said.

To report any information concerning Stockton, contact the RCPD at 785-537-2112 or Crimestoppers at 785-539-7777.

Kansas attorney sworn in

By Amanda Keim
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Former Douglas County district judge Stephen Six was sworn in as Kansas attorney general yesterday amid calls for restoring integrity to the office.

Six was appointed by Gov. Kathleen Sebelius after former Attorney General Paul Morrison resigned following a sex scandal. According to the Kansas City Star, Six is the third person to hold the office in a little more than a year.

Though Six has made several promises to uphold the office's duties, the Kansas Republican Party remains skeptical.

"We feel like the Democrats have only been in that office for a year and they have a long way to go to rebuild the credibility that's been lost in that office," said Corrie

Students not concerned with race in 2008 election

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This is the third article in a five-week series examining the voting behavior of different groups within society and their effects on the 2008 presidential election. In the next few weeks, the Collegian will examine the electoral effects of the military and religious communities nationally and locally in that order.

Young black voters across the country, and specifically at K-State, are concerned about issues like the cost of higher education, the U.S. economy, and criminal justice to name a few.

Amber Foust, senior in management information systems and president of the historically black sorority Delta Sigma Theta Inc., said she is worried about the country's economic state. Since she is graduating soon, she said she wants to know what her job prospects will be. She said she needs to know if she will be able to support herself after college.

"As a young, black female in Kansas, I'm looking for the economy to get a pick-up," Foust said.

Diallo Brooks, member of the National Coalition on Black Civic Participation, is co-chair for the coalition's program, "Black Youth Vote." Brooks said the purpose of the Black Youth Vote campaign is to engage young people in the election process by addressing pertinent issues. He said the opportunity for young, black voters to find jobs depends on how the potential recession affects the black community, specifically in housing.

"Young people want to know they have a fair opportunity for jobs, training, and everything that goes along with that," Brooks said.

Mark Nelson, senior in social sciences and former chair for the political action committee for Black Student Union, said in addition to the housing market, he is most concerned about what politicians will do to help U.S. international relations and the value of the American dollar.

"These are things that not just black voters, but all voters, need to be looking at right now," Nelson said.

Brooks said education costs are one of the biggest concerns

Professors, residents discuss legacy of influential author

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Han Yu and Naomi Wood, K-State English professors, led a discussion last night at the Manhattan Public Library about how Jane Austen's books appeal to people from various cultures.

"One thing people like to say about Austen is that she's universal," Wood, an associate professor, said.

The discussion was part of the "Jane Austen Festival," which started on Jan. 29 and will end on Feb. 2 at the Manhattan Public Library. A "Brown Bag Book Discussion" on Pride and Prejudice opened the week's events. The library will show the films "Pride and Prejudice" (2006) and "Bride and Prejudice" (2004), a Bollywood musical adaptation of the novel, starting at 1 p.m. Saturday. Tea and scones will be served during the showings.

Yu, an assistant professor, and Wood opened the Austen discussion by describing the first time they read one of Austen's novels and what they liked about her writing.

Yu, who came from China, said she owes it to Austen for getting her involved with English communication and rhetoric.

"It was Austen who really got me interested in learning the English language," Yu said.

She said she liked the way Austen portrayed the characters in her books, especially the heroines.

Wood discovered Austen in a different way. She said she got tired of reading books "about boys having teenage crises" in high school. So she tried reading Austen's novels.

"A light went on and I thought, 'At last! Classic literature I like,'" Wood said.

She said she loved the romance, the delicacy of

Recording industry targets college students; students could be at risk for lawsuits

ON THE ATTACK

Big 12 and other local universities have been targeted by the RIAA.

University of Nebraska-Lincoln (7)
University of Texas-Austin (5)
Iowa State University
Texas A&M University
University of Kansas
Oklahoma State University
Wichita State University —parentheses indicate more than one round of lawsuits

Harvard Townsend, university Information Technology security officer, said the ISP then looks into the findings and has the choice to notify the students accused of illegal file sharing so they can remove the illegal documents.

Richard Seaton, university attorney, said the university does not have to forward the letter to the students because it is only a request by the RIAA. To get access to the students' computer files, the RIAA would need a valid subpoena.

Though some universities complied with the RIAA requests, some universities reportedly refused the requests, saying that it was not their job to release the students' personal information. Seaton said he suspects K-State would do the latter.

"We'd probably try to protect the privacy of the students," Seaton said.

Townsend said IT has not received letters from the RIAA, but it has received letters from other organizations about illegal file sharing. He said he received five letters mentioning illegal activity on the K-State Internet server last fall.

Though K-State IT must legally investigate these instances when companies notify them, Townsend said IT does not independently investigate illegal file sharing.

"We don't go hunting for file-sharers," he said.

According to the K-State IT policy, it is prohibited for K-State Internet users to use or even download file sharing, or peer-to-peer, programs like Napster and Limewire.

The policy statement states that these programs severely restrict the Internet connection and anyone caught using these programs is subject to sanctions from the service provider.

"We had tremendous problems with people using Napster around 2000," Townsend said. "The Internet in the dorms was useless."

THE LEGAL ISSUES

Students break the copyright law when they either take or make a copy of a song or other file like a movie without paying for it, said Todd Simon, professor of journalism and mass communications.

Simon said people do not break the law if they rip tracks they have bought on their computer since they have already paid for that music, but if they give a copy to a friend, that friend did not pay for that music, and both are breaking the law.

Simon said the RIAA lawsuits are a scare tactic that works effectively. Simon said only one student who has been targeted by the RIAA has not taken the deal.

Simon said the student lost the case and owed the RIAA more than $200,000. The trial was taken to an appeals court and is still pending.

Because of the lawsuits' minimal effect on file sharing, Simon said the recording industry might have to change who it goes after and how it sells its product. He said organizations that protect copyrights, like the RIAA, could go after the ISPs that allow users to illegally share files instead of going after individuals.

"Big conglomerates going after the little guys never looks good anyway," he said.

Simon also said the recording industry will have to find ways to reduce the cost of music if it wants to stem illegal downloading and file sharing.

Simon said the market price of a song is traditionally about $1, but should go down.

"There's no manufacturing. There's no cost for shipping the album or making the case sleeve," Simon said. "There's no reason that buying a song on iTunes should cost that much."

On its Web site, the RIAA promotes the use of digital download programs like Ruckus, which are supported by advertisements and provide access to free and legal downloads.

A representative from the RIAA said with new technology, there is no reason for students to risk getting caught by the recording industry or their university and paying thousands of dollars for breaking the law.

Lydia Peele, student body vice president and senior in math education, said she hopes to somehow alert the student body about the RIAA's actions against college students.

"Looking at what's happening to other schools in the Big 12, that's a lot of students," Peele said. "... Students need to be aware of the consequences of their actions."

Senate commends men's basketball team

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate added a commendation to the agenda at the beginning of last night's meeting. The resolution commended the 2007-2008 K-State men's basketball team for ending "the streak" and defeating the University of Kansas at Bramlage Coliseum for the first time in 25 years.

Student Body Vice President Lydia Peele asked that a copy of the commendation be sent to KU's student body president and vice president, and they were added to the list of recipients. The legislation was held for referral until next week.

Senators approved a resolution in honor of former student body president Kyle Barker last night. Instead of the usual applause, senators paused for a moment of silence in Barker's memory.

Student Senate also unanimously resolved to support the K-State PROUD campaign for their success and service.

Kansas support for K-State has declined to less than 25 percent of the university's annual budget, according to a K-State PROUD pamphlet. Student participation and donations could help this situation.

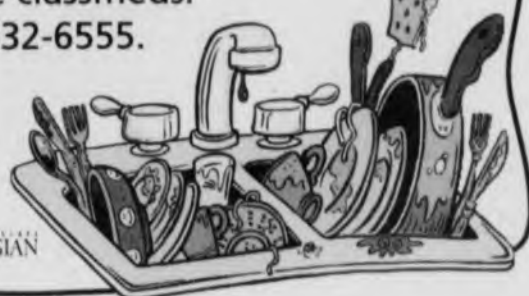

Student Senate also resolved to commend the SafeRide program for attaining its 100,000th passenger late next week.

SafeRide coordinator John Bergin, senior in agriculture education, said the 100,000th passenger will receive a bag of prizes provided by the local Anheuser-Busch distributor, Flint Hills Beverage.

All allocations and other new legislation items were held for referral next week.

Black enough

Obama's actions could improve racial equality

Christina Klein | COLLEGIAN

On Feb. 1, 2007, Time magazine featured a column written by Ta-Nehisi Paul Coates, who wondered if Barack Obama was "black enough" for African-Americans.

A year later, the debate continues in some quarters, but we all must certainly agree he is black enough to have been a slave in South Carolina 150 years ago and black enough to not have voting rights 60 years ago.

The reality of these statements makes his win in the aforementioned Palmetto State all the more surprising. Before I continue, I must admit to a life-long American South bias; the Kwanzaas of "Eyes on the Prize" and "Roots" marathons left an indelible impression. However, exit poll data from CBS confirms my long-held belief in strong racial and generational divides in the region. It reported 78 percent of white women and 73 percent of white men voted against Obama in South Carolina. 84 percent of non-black voters over age 60 voted against him as well.

On first glance, this data seems to support my prejudice. However, there is reason to believe a colleague's recent passionate claim of a post-Strom Thurmond South is not entirely misplaced. The same data set showed Obama won with huge margins with white voters ages 18-29 and overall with voters ages 18-44. He won with the rich and the poor, the educated and the non-educated, the religious and their non-practicing counterparts, and of course, the overall primary landed somewhat in his favor. Perhaps most telling, he received more total votes, by a margin of more than 100,000, in the state of South Carolina, than did his Democratic and Republican rivals.

This could mean Senator Joe Biden's surprise at Obama's cleanliness and articulation and Bill O'Reilly's shock at black public civility might soon become outdated. The numbers from the South Carolina primary could signify the real difference between Jesse Jackson's wins in this primary in 1984 and 1988 and Obama's triumph in 2008.

Though this win is tempered by the knowledge that South Carolina's electoral votes have gone the way of the Republican candidate in past elections, we cynical Yanks should at least take notice of a changing Southern wind.

While I'm not so naïve as to believe we are at the end of our long journey to racial equality, I know we are several great strides closer to realizing our dreams. Whether they take shape in the oratory of a Dr. King or Thomas Jefferson, this election might give us an opportunity to re-evaluate our conceptions about our fellow Americans and our notions of what is possible.

TO THE POINT

Students should pay small fee for music

The recording industry has targeted college students who are illegally downloading music, and K-State students might be at risk.

Though organizations like the Recording Industry Association of America mostly look at users on a university Internet server, which would apply to students in residence halls and greek houses, all students are still susceptible to lawsuits for illegal file sharing.

It's less than a dollar for a song on the Internet; it just makes sense to spend a little extra rather than spending thousands of dollars for breaking the law.

Students can even download programs off the Internet that give them access to free, legal downloads. The programs are funded completely by advertisements, so payment for the songs is just the occasional intrusive ad.

College students usually don't have much money, but if most can afford a $300 iPod, they should be able to pay a little extra for the songs on their iPods.

It's just laziness at this point; many songs are legally available at little or no cost, so there's no excuse.

It's either buy a handful of songs at the cost of a lunch at the K-State Student Union, or risk owing the recording industry as much as $750 per illegally-downloaded song.

One song could cost one dollar or $750; it's your choice.

FAFSA requirements should be re-examined

With the priority deadline for the Free Application for Federal Student Aid fast approaching, it is a relief to not have to fill one out this year.

One bothersome item on the FAFSA was the "Expected Family Income" that was calculated at the end of the application. The EFC is an estimate of what parents are expected to contribute to their child's education.

There are probably many students who would argue the FAFSA is in no way accurate when it comes to the EFC. For many students who are still claimed as a dependent by their parents, the FAFSA and federal and state taxes offer an alarming conundrum. Parents would like to receive the tax break from claiming a dependent in college, yet students receive less financial aid as their parents' income increases.

For example, if a student has parents who make $1 million annually, they will get little to no financial aid from the government. Not all parents help their children go through college. Parents might be trying to teach their offspring the value of putting themselves through college, or they might refuse to help them out because of a family disagreement. This puts students in a precarious position — do they attend college, struggling their way through at poverty level, or do they forego college and get jobs to support themselves?

Besides parents who don't help their children, the biggest problem with the FAFSA and the EFC concerns students who have divorced parents. Many times, one parent will claim the student as a dependent; however, the FAFSA requires students to list both parents' incomes even though one doesn't claim the student as a dependent.

It's as if the FAFSA doesn't seem to believe in the reality of shattered families. Parents who don't help their children; single parents supporting three kids on a $40,000 salary; parents who want to help but can't afford to spend thousands of dollars annually on their child's education.

The FAFSA should take the reality of what parents actually contribute to their children's college education into consideration. The EFC does serve a purpose as some kind of preliminary estimate as to the amount of financial aid a student should receive; however, the FAFSA should compare the EFC against an actual family contribution from the previous year in order to make a more fair assessment.

Until this happens, some students will be unable to receive the amount of financial aid they should.

Sasha Kaun? Sasha's a girl's name.

There's a KU fan cheering for the Jayhawks in Rusty's Next Door. Please don't make me beat you up.

Alright, there are sober kids in Africa, so finish your beer.

Kansas State University Parking Services can go straight back to hell where they came from.

To the guy that had the "That Just Happened" sign at the game last night: Hell yeah. You rock.

Hey, can I get tickets to this game in Africa? Because it's gonna be pretty good, I think.

So, how much money are these tickets. Beasley was talking about for this KU-K-State game in Africa? Because I really want to go to it.

Africa? Because it's gonna be pretty good, I think.

Only Michael Beasley can prevent forest fires.

Should I worship Bill Walker?

After reconsidering, I decided I'd rather go to Alaska because I don't want to get a passport. So, how much are those?

I want to make sex with Kansas State.

Hey, KU: do you like apples? How do you like them apples?

LOL at KU.

Here's to me, here's to you. We beat the crap out of old KU.

I think tattooed girls are pretty.

The original chicken is really pissed off at all of the imposters that showed up at the game today.

Hey, K-State: way to oversell the GA section. Bleep you.

Hey, Classy Cats: spend less time doing your hair and more time practicing. That routine really sucked.

Attention: basketball players on both teams: Please keep your lower lip in your mouth. Thank you.

Chris Merriewether, sit down. You only scored one point.

Yeah, I believe that's No. 1 in the Big 12. Thank you so much.

I'm naming my new dog Beasley. Thank you, sir.

I'm so happy right now, and I don't have to say why. You all know. Thank you.

Hey, to that guy in Stats 351: do us all a favor and quit eating carrots in class.

It's 11 and I just threw up at a bar. That's never happened. Go K-State. Beat KU. We did. What's up now?

Uh, yeah. Since we beat them in Manhattan, I was just wondering when we're gonna beat them in Africa. See ya.

Come to Rusty's. They're not carding. Are you there? Hello?

Yeah, I just wanted to let you know that my roommate sucks. He plays Star Wars all day and it's really a pain in the ass for me. Bye.

Rock chalk jayhawk. K who?

The question is, how many chicken hawks does it take to guard one Wildcat named Beasley?

So, that was pretty much the greatest basketball game in the history of the world.

Michael Beasley stole my moves.

To the short brown-haired Alpha Chi: will you marry me?

I'm gonna fart in your mouth.

That just happened.

K-State women share love of tap with community, campus performances

By David Griffin Jr.
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bursts of laughter and sharp taps traveled through Nichols Hall on Sunday afternoon.

The young women participating in K-State Tap Ensemble, a team of passionate female tap dancers, expressed emotions of excitement and energy during their third practice of the semester.

Director Julie Pentz, assistant professor in dance, also shared this excitement and energy.

"The inspiration for this new KSU tap dance ensemble is really just a love for tap," Pentz said.

Twelve women are actively involved in the team, and only four of them are dance majors. The nonmajors joined the ensemble for enjoyment — their majors range from mechanical engineering to kinesiology. Most of the team members have tap danced since they were children, though.

"It's really fun to make music with your feet," said Mindy Von Elling, sophomore in public relations. "It's really different from other types of dance."

Students can fill out forms for tap-a-grams at www.ksu.edu/dance/tap.html. The team is asking for a $10 donation for these tap-a-grams. The donation will go towards the Kansas State University Foundation/DANCE.

The K-State Tap Ensemble is committed to sharing tap dance with the local community and regionally through performance and lecture demonstrations.

The tap dances will present a variety of genres including traditional tap, rhythm tap and a collaboration with the K-State Latin Jazz Ensemble.

"I think the most exciting thing is for the campus community and the local community to find out that KSU has strong tap," Pentz said.

The ensemble's performances also include audience participation, said Jennifer Grantman, senior in social science and mass communications.

"We have stuff that involves audience participation so the audience can learn a few tap moves that [professional tap dancers] doing all over the nation," Grantman said.

Along with campus performances, the tap team primarily does performances in the local community.

The K-State Tap Ensemble does not charge a fee for its performances, but they do ask for donations made to the Kansas State University Foundation/DANCE.

These funds are used for K-State Dance Scholarships.

"Having the opportunity to be a traveling company working with performance gives me a professional background," said Monette McKee, graduate student in dance.

The women enjoy going out and showing people something they might not have experienced otherwise.

"The exciting fact is that we're going to be able to go out and reach all the other students and let them know that KSU dance is here, because it's not real prominent at the university, so I'm really excited about that," said Cali Dunham, senior in kinesiology.

part in; they also offer tap-a-grams, tapping telegrams. The team asks for a $10 donation for tap-a-grams. They can be done for occasions like Valentine's Day, birthdays and anniversaries or for entertainment value.

The team's first performance is Feb. 12 at a community luncheon.

The campus performances will begin April 4 and the last will be April 30, at events like KSU Dance Day, Spring Dance, World Dance Day and Dance Student Spotlight.

"I'm really excited about the ensemble," Pentz said. "I hope that more people can come watch us perform."

Concert raises awareness of Obama presidential bid, upcoming caucus

By Deborah Muhwezi
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"Barack'n'Roll," an event to educate students about the upcoming Democratic presidential caucus on Feb. 5, promoted students to support Sen. Barack Obama in his bid for president.

The event was at Kite's Bar and Grille in Aggieville Thursday night, complete with a live band, Lucia Drive, and the California Democratic Debate playing on a TV screen while K-State Students for Obama used their platform to encourage students to vote.

"We feel like he is the best democratic candidate that's there for us," said Lauren Rohrer, representative for Students for Obama and senior in music theater. "Students' vote matters and it has in the past primaries-as we've seen in Iowa and South Carolina — we want to duplicate that success here in Kansas."

Rohrer said other Obama supporters have been going events like these all over the country and their organization wanted to have more of a social get-together in order to "have a good time while supporting Sen. Obama," she said.

Matt McCann, graduate student in theater and lead guitarist and back-up vocals for Lucia Drive, said he was disappointed with the turnout. There were five K-State students in attendance, but he said many people might have been at home watching the debate. McCann said he still enjoyed performing for an event that supported Obama.

"Anything that you can do for a cause that you enjoy — I think that generates passion. [It] generates some type of excitement about whatever you're passionate about is good," McCann said.

The event attracted a mixed crowd, including Brett Bucholz, graduate student in counseling and student development.

"I think, especially in Kansas, where there may not be very many Democrats, they'll see that there are others and that their vote may actually count because they can see that there is actually a number of them," he said.

Bucholz said the importance of voting depends on the demographics of the state. Though people in other areas might say voting isn't important, Bucholz said people are beginning to realize its importance, especially this election.

The Democratic caucus is at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the K-State Student Union Ballroom. Rohrer, with Students for Obama, encouraged those who like Obama to come to the caucus and show their support. She said it's great that there are those who like Sen. Obama, but there's a difference between that and actually showing up to the caucus.

"We want people to match that like and that meaning toward Obama to showing up and actually caucusing," she said.

Wildcats look to improve at 1st dual of season

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Business as usual is the approach the K-State tennis team is taking into its first home match of the year. The Wildcats play the Syracuse Orange at 10 a.m. Saturday in Ahearn Field House.

Coach Steve Bietau said he does not know what to expect from the Orange on the tennis court.

"We really don't know much about Syracuse," Bietau said. "We don't get to the East much, and they don't get out here very often. We connected with them as part of a trip to come out here and play Missouri and we're going into this one with a pretty open book."

The Orange are led by junior Maria Vasilyeva and sophomore Chelsea Jones, the team's only returning players this season. Vas-ilyeva was limited to doubles action in the fall season and posted a 4-2 record. Since beginning the spring season, in which the Orange have played two team matches, she has started doubles play with a 2-0 record and also boasts a 2-0 record in singles action.

Jones also has been in action a considerable amount this season, posting a 7-4 record in singles matches and a 4-8 mark in doubles play. The squad's youth has given freshmen Katlyn Haycock and Simone Kalhorn and sophomore transfer Ashley Spicer considerable playing time.

K-State junior Katerina Kudlackova said she sees some advantages in facing a young team.

"I think, since we are playing at home, that is the first advantage for us," Kudlackova said. "I think they're going to be kind of freaking out when they see this high ceiling and this different surface."

The Wildcats have not played a dual match during the 2007-08 season. During the Georgia Invitational, the Wildcats showed progress from the tournament's first day to the end against Georgia, Troy and Mississippi State. Though Bietau said after the meet there was still work to be done, the preparation will not differ too much from earlier in the season.

"It's just a continuation of our normal training," he said. "Again we've been conditioning pretty hard, trying to get their games clear in their head, both for singles and doubles. We've been narrowing down some possibilities for doubles teams and looking at different singles line-ups."

The doubles line-ups might be closer to being resolved than previously thought. The strong performances on the last day of the Georgia tournament came from the pairings of freshmen Vanessa Cottin and Pauline Guemas, sophomore Natasha Vieira and senior Viviana Yrureta, and senior Olga Klimova and Kudlackova. Bietau said he has some specific expectations for success for each player tomorrow.

"Vivi [Yrureta] is clearly one of our team leaders and has played a big role in the past, and she's playing off the wall right now," he said. "I think we can count on good performances out of her. Olga is coming back from an injury and we're optimistic that she's going to show us some things that she hasn't been able to do for a while. And, of course, the freshmen have some expectations too; they're definitely going to be in the line-up playing somewhere."

Giants can win vs. Patriots

Earlier in the NFL season, when I predicted the New England Patriots would go 16-0, I have to admit my prediction wasn't much of a stretch.

If you are a fan of football, or maybe even if you aren't, it's safe to assume you heard from someone how good the Patriots are and the likelihood of an undefeated season more than a few times.

I received one response on the eCollegian about my original column, written after the Patriots' win over the Indianapolis Colts.

One person did not support my belief of a 16-0 season, but what they did believe was the New York Giants were the team, if there was one, that could stop the winning streak.

In the spirit of all the political endorsements of late, I am going to endorse whoever wrote that comment and agree the Giants are the team that can stop the Patriots at 18 wins in a row and keep them from winning 38 straight games.

OK, a small stretch there at the end of that sentence, but you have to think the Patriots could probably pull that many wins off if they beat the Giants.

But, while many people are writing the Giants off and are already giving the Lombardi Trophy to New England, I think the Giants really could do this.

I can honestly say I am neither a fan of the Patriots nor the Giants, and Tom Brady and Eli Manning aren't my favorite quarterbacks, but if I had to choose, I would go with Manning.

Sure, Brady is the guy who will throw three interceptions and still rally a team to victory, but Manning is challenging Brady with his wonderful playoff statistics.

Overthrowing a dynasty is never easy, and it won't be an easy Sunday for the Giants, but they have all the tools there to pull it off.

The New York defense is as good as the defenses of the Baltimore Ravens and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers that led their teams to Super Bowl wins.

One flaw those two teams had in common was an offense that didn't necessarily complement the defense. With the Giants, the defense seems to be served nicely by the offense, or at least has been in the playoffs.

The other difference between the Ravens and Buccaneers' championship wins and the task that lies ahead of the Giants is the fact that the Patriots are better, by far, than the Oakland Raiders and Giants teams that were on the losing end of those other games.

New England is spectacular, better than any team I have ever seen in the NFL, being too young to have seen the dynasty teams of the 1970s and 1980s.

The best thing that has happened leading up to this game is the prediction of a Giants win by New York wide receiver Plaxico Burress. His guess of 23-17 has given me the confidence to stand by a prediction of my own: Giants, 31-29, with the Patriots missing a potential game-winning field goal.

Go ahead and say what you will about my prediction, especially if I am wrong after Sunday is over, and if you have a better prediction, go ahead and post it online. We always welcome your thoughts.

Enjoy the game Sunday and don't stop celebrating that win over KU. I'm pretty sure they can still hear it in Lawrence.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

K-State to bring, face depleted roster

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's basketball team will face a Missouri team Saturday that is missing at least one of its upperclassmen, and possibly more.

Following an altercation Sunday in which senior guard Stephon Hannah broke his jaw, Missouri coach Mike Anderson decided to suspend senior forwards Marshall Brown and Darryl Butterfield, senior guard Jason Horton and junior forward Leo Lyons. Anderson cited a "violation of team rules" as the reason for the suspension.

"Each situation is a different one," Anderson said. "You have to deal with them. What you have to do is, it's a culture that's taking place, and you have to clean it up, simple as that."

Missing from K-State's roster will be junior forward Andre Gilbert, who has been suspended for a "violation of team rules" as well, and associate coach Dalonte Hill. Hill was arrested after K-State's win over Kansas on Thursday morning under suspicion of driving under the influence of the Pottawatomie County Sheriff's Department. Hill had not been formally charged as of press time but will be absent from the Missouri game.

"Obviously, this is a matter, which we view seriously," Athletic Director Tim Weiser said in a press release. "We have high expectations for all of our employees and will monitor the situation closely. Coach Martin and Dalonte felt that given his poor decision it would be appropriate for him to sit out Saturday's game."

K-State (15-4, 5-0 Big 12

Conference) is coming off an 84-75 victory at home against KU. Freshman forward Dominique Sutton replaced Gilbert in the starting rotation for that game. Sutton played 26 minutes and recorded a team-high two steals.

"The reality of it is in Big 12, the next game on your schedule is the most important game of the year," coach Frank Martin said. "Once that game's over, you have to prepare for the one after that. Regardless of what happens in game No. 5, we have to go out there and play game No. 6. They don't stop the season after No. 5."

In their first game without Hannah, Missouri's leading scorer, the Tigers (12-6, 2-4 Big 12) fell 66-62 to Nebraska in Columbia, Mo. Missouri played a season-low seven players during Wednesday's game.

Women to play for 1st place Saturday

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Wednesday, the K-State men's basketball team took sole possession of first place in the Big 12.

Saturday, the K-State women's team will get its chance to take the conference lead when it takes on No. 6 Baylor at noon in Bramlage Coliseum.

K-State (15-5, 7-0 Big 12 Conference) remained tied with Baylor (19-1, 7-0 Big 12) for the league lead after surviving a tough road test at Nebraska.

It took a late shot from sophomore forward Ashley Sweat for the No. 18-ranked Wildcats to survive, 77-75. The win vaulted K-State to its tenth straight victory.

Meanwhile, the Bears found themselves in their own trouble while facing Texas at home.

Senior forward Angela Tisdale hit a three-point basket with 19 seconds left to notch a 61-60 win for Baylor and set up Saturday's matchup of the conference's unbeaten teams.

For the Bears, this season has been their best since the 1975-76 campaign and the best league start since the inception of the Big 12.

Baylor is led by Tisdale, who is scoring 15.3 points per game. Junior forward Rachel Allison is averaging 13.6 points and 7.9 rebounds per contest. A total of five Bears players are averaging double figures in points.

K-State is being led in scoring by senior guard Kimberly Dietz, who is averaging 15.3 points per game and 18.9 points per Big 12 game.

Junior forward Marlies Gipson and junior guard Shalee Lehning are leading the Wildcats in the battle for rebounds. In conference play alone, Gipson is pulling down eight rebounds per game while Lehning is recording 7.3 boards per game.

Both players are leaders in scoring for K-State as well, with Lehning averaging 12.4 and Gipson scoring 14 points per game. Sweat is also in double figures with 12.4 points per game.

Out of the five starters for the Wildcats (Dietz, Gipson, Lehning, Sweat and junior guard Kari Kincaid), four are averaging more than 30 minutes per Big 12 game with Kincaid just outside of that mark at 28.7 minutes.

Wildcats hope to make strides in first heptathlon this season

Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Only 30 athletes from the 75-person K-State track team will travel to Lincoln, Neb., this weekend for the 33rd-annual Frank Sevigne Husker Invitational.

Freshman Moritz Cleve and junior Adam Fretwell are competing in their first heptathlons of the season. Fretwell said the invitational will provide good competition because of the minimum requirements to compete in the heptathlon.

He said the Wildcats will face strong heptathletes from Nebraska as well as last year's national champion, Jake Arnold, who is competing unattached from any college.

"I hope to do well," Fretwell said. "For multi-eventers, it's always exciting to do their first multi-event of the season."

Coach Cliff Rovelto said the Big 12 Conference is strong in the heptathlon and as many as six or seven heptathletes from the conference could qualify for the NCAA championships. He said this meet will be a good measure of how the Wildcats measure up to good competition.

"The Nebraska guys will be in the meet this weekend, so we'll get a little bit better idea of what kind of shape people are in," Rovelto said. "Based on what I've seen from individual results, I think that that will be an extremely strong event."

In the running events, senior Morgan Bonds is a favorite in the 800-meter race. She has won the 600-yard race the last three years at this meet and won the 600-yard race in last weekend's Conference Challenge, which was also in Lincoln.

The invitational should provide a good opportunity to run an 800-meter race on a 200-meter track, which is the same-size track used at NCAA indoor championships. Bonds said she likes running the 800-meter after competing well in the 600-yard race.

"The 600 is a good stimulus to run a fast 800," Bonds said. "It will be interesting to see if I can go out and get the provisional standards for nationals this weekend. That's my goal."

Sophomore Loren Groves is another Wildcat who has a chance to perform well. She qualified for the NCAA Indoor Championships in the weight throw when she broke the school record with a 69-11.50 toss on Jan. 19.

"Loren is clearly the best girl in the conference," Rovelto said. "She is certainly capable of winning."

Rovelto also said junior Scott Sellers has a good chance to win the high jump this weekend, but he will be facing the best competition in the Big 12.

"He'd have to jump well; he couldn't have an off day and still win," Rovelto said.

Young equestrian team has high expectations for rest of season

By Jonathan Wright
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With a young team, it's hard to improve on a 4-2 fall season record, but that's exactly what the K-State equestrian team plans to do.

The team, led by co-head coaches Ashley Foster and Casie Williamson, looks to mix its core group of veteran riders with younger riders in hopes of improving on the strong fall season. Both head coaches are in their first full seasons on the job.

"Having the opportunity to co-head coach with coach Foster has been a great opportunity," Williamson said. "We have our own ways of working with our teams, but we hope for the same end result."

Both coaches work with different aspects of the team. Foster deals with the English side of the team, while Williamson heads up the Western squad.

"It is really more efficient for the team to have two head coaches because it allows one coach to specialize in the English discipline and one in the Western," said junior Alyssa Freeman, a Western rider.

There were questions going into the fall about the youth of the team, but after four impressive wins, there is little doubt about the riders' ability.

"The fall season gave our riders the confidence they needed going into a tougher spring schedule," Williamson said. "I am sure this will lead us to many more wins and a successful national championship."

The team's youth is one of its biggest strengths, said freshman Alecia Zimbelman, who rides Western.

"I have gained quite a bit of experience riding on the varsity equestrian team," Zimbelman said. "I have learned a lot and I know I will learn a lot more."

The spring season begins this weekend when the team travels to Stillwater, Okla., to compete against an undefeated Oklahoma State team. The show begins at 10 a.m. Saturday at Oklahoma State's Animal Science Arena.

Although the team is young and riding against a solid Cowgirls squad, team members feel confident that they will do well this weekend and build on their success from the fall.

"I have very high expectations for the spring season," Zimbelman said.

A national championship cannot be won this weekend, but the team can certainly take a big step toward accomplishing its ultimate goal by beating Oklahoma State, Freeman said.

"If we continue to work hard, I know we are capable of beating teams like Oklahoma State," she said. "I would definitely have to say the overall goal for us is to walk away with a team national championship."

Representative sponsoring bill to put 'In God We Trust' on plates

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some Kansas residents wanted a new kind of personalized tag for their vehicles stating "In God We Trust," and Rep. Jim Morrison, R-Colby, is trying to make that happen.

Morrison said the personalized tags were requested by some of his constituents who had seen similar Indiana plates and wanted them introduced in Kansas.

"I represent the district," Morrison said. "When people request something in my district, whether I agree or not, I make up legislation for it. That's what this is all about."

"If I just ignored them because I didn't like it, that would not be a good representative, in my view."

He added that unless "it's just a plain stupid idea," everything deserves a chance.

Morrison went to the House Transportation Committee with the suggestion, and it decided to sponsor the bill.

Morrison said the money from the personalized tags usually goes to the organization that is sponsoring them, but in this case, the money would go to general funds for the state, unless that specification is changed during the bill's process.

Some people have said the plates would be a violation of church and state, but Morrison said that isn't an issue at all.

"It's personalized," he said. "You request it. It signifies whatever. People will say the state doesn't have any business doing that, but the state's not imposing anything. It's an option."

Morrison said the bill has two to three weeks before it would go to the house and eventually to the governor for signature.

A secretary in the governor's office said the office has not released any kind of statement at this time regarding whether Gov. Kathleen Sebelius will support and sign the bill.

Morrison said he does not expect any problems with the bill, and if everything runs smoothly, it would be passed July 1 and the tags would be available during the month of August.

Bonnie Brown, assistant to the director of motor vehicles at the Kansas Department of Revenue, said each institution sets its own price to charge for personalized tags like the ones that Morrison is suggesting.

Brown said the price usually falls between $25 and $50.

"For state purposes, it's still the same fees as any other tag," she said.

Brown said the state offers several personalized tags from individual agencies, including universities, fire stations and the Children's Trust Fund.

'Biggest Winner' program to help students attain goals

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The objective of "The Biggest Loser," an NBC reality show, is for the severely overweight participants to lose the most weight possible; the results are people starving themselves and over-exercising to attain an unrealistic weight-loss goal.

However, the K-State PAC-CATS, a peer-educator group which promotes healthy lifestyles, is focusing on setting goals for attainable and manageable lifestyle choices with their newest program, "The Biggest Winner," a 6-week fitness and wellness program.

Alex Serra, senior in kinesiology and student coordinator of PAC-CATS, said there are a few key differences in the reality show "The Biggest Loser" and K-State's program "The Biggest Winner."

"Our program is a goal-setting process," Serra said. "We are increasing students' confidence through promoting healthy lifestyles. This is a spin-off of 'The Biggest Loser,' but we are not going to say [if you] weigh-in at 160 pounds, you didn't make your goal; you lose."

The program will be broken up in teams to focus on students' individual goals, whether they are working out more often or stress-management, Serra said. Peer mentors will lead the teams, and students involved in the program will meet with the mentors to help the students meet their goals. There will be prizes for the individual and team that meets all or the majority of their set goals.

The 15 peer mentors are all majoring in areas that focus on healthy lifestyles, including kinesiology, nutrition, dietetics and psychology.

"Everybody is talking about losing weight for spring break," Serra said. "This is a great, healthy way to do that."

Students should take advantage of this free program because it helps students to be accountable for their goals and provides a team setting and workout buddies, she said.

At the beginning of the program, students will take a healthy-behavior assessment and mentors will use the results to see where they can set goals. The students and the mentors will meet once a week, Serra said.

Fred Newton, project director for PAC-CATS, said the program originally started with a Sunflower Foundation grant. The foundation was created to improve Kansans' health.

Obesity is the No. 1 health problem in the United States. Newton said he thought since freshmen come to college and fall victim to unhealthy eating habits and the freshman 15, PAC-CATS would be a great way to promote healthy lifestyles.

PAC-CATS focuses on freshmen by going into freshman orientation classes where 400-700 students then take a health assessment which gives them feedback on acceptable standards for a healthy lifestyle, he said.

Katie James, senior in kinesiology, nutrition and exercise sciences and PAC-CATS peer mentor, said her experience working with students to help them achieve their health goals was amazing.

"I love that I am able to use [my] knowledge in the classroom, and applying it to real-life situations is really rewarding and seeing their growth as an individual," James said.

Young and in charge Underclassmen lead campus organizations

By Joe Vossen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's basketball team is not the only group on campus led by a talented set of underclassmen.

As the spring term begins, campus braces for the usual rush of membership drives, philanthropy campaigns and student government elections typically led by juniors and seniors; but like the basketball squad, many organizations on campus are benefiting from the talents of promising freshmen and sophomores.

MORE THAN FARMING

Bethany Bohnenblust, freshman in agriculture communication, might have one of the busiest schedules on campus.

In June 2007, Bohnenblust was selected as state president of the Kansas FFA Association — an organization with more than 7,300 members.

Even after starting school in August, Bohnenblust found time to drive more than 12,000 miles promoting agriculture in Kansas as the state president.

Bohnenblust admitted the difficulty of balancing class and her commitment to FFA, but she said she stays motivated by the relationships she has formed with her fellow officers and the people she meets across the state.

"I love working with people," Bohnenblust said, "and going out and talking to the family farmer who has been doing his job for 80 years and finding common ground."

In almost eight months as state president, Bohnenblust has spoken to more than 15,000 people about agricultural issues.

Over winter break she traveled with four other K-State officers on an FFA-sponsored trip to Spain. There, she learned about the similarities between U.S. and European agriculture and noticed some striking differences.

"Over here, a big ideal is freedom and independence, but it's not a big deal for them," Bohnenblust said, alluding to the contrasting levels of autonomy enjoyed by farmers on the two continents. "They have no problem signing over all their business decisions or selling their land."

Her passion for agriculture is evident. Bohnenblust jumped headfirst into the College of Agriculture, joining the Agriculture Communicators of Tomorrow (ACT) and the College of Agriculture Training Program (CAT).

She said her role as FFA president has been rewarding, and the lessons learned have complemented her first semester experiences in the classroom.

"College isn't truly learning about how to solve math problems or how to grow mold," she said. "What it does teach us is how to think in the world we live in, how to call to action for a cause, and how to connect with our talents, with teachers, and within an industry."

SEARCHING HER OPTIONS
Where some choose to focus their energy on one event or organization, others have spent their first few semesters exploring as many clubs as possible.

Courtney Held, sophomore in dietetics, began exploring every opportunity from her first days on campus.

Held joined Alpha Delta Pi sorority her freshman year, and has risen to the role of formal recruitment chair.

She said other members of her chapter first encouraged her to explore all the possibilities on campus.

"The women in the house are so involved they really encouraged me to do the same," said Held. "[They] told me about some of the organizations they were in. It really helped to have their perspective and hear firsthand what some of the clubs were like."

Held took the advice to heart, becoming a Student Senate intern, a member of Quest Freshman Honorary, and joining Student Foundation and Student Alumni Board her freshman year.

Held has also assumed a leadership position in SAB, serving as the co-chair of a committee that plans the student enhancement programs Wildcat Welcome Day and Senior Send-off. Busier than ever, Held said she still discovers positions that interest her.

"As the months and years roll by, I am constantly hearing about organizations that I want to be a part of," she said. "I've been adding on here and there. It's hard not to join everything."

It is even harder for Held to imagine her life without all of the clubs, organizations, projects and priorities that keep her busy. When asked to envision a life that is less busy, Held said she would prefer to keep her schedule as it is now.

"I think about [if I would like being less involved] sometimes — when I have a free weekend or a non-busy day," she said. "I don't know what to do with myself. I get bored and antsy. I feel like I would go nuts without all of this. When I know I have a lot of things to do, it's easier to get them done — I get on a roll and in the mode."

Held said she can stay busy on campus and still keep academics her No. 1 priority. Brianna Nelson Goff, associate dean for academic affairs in the College of Human Ecology, identified Held as an exceptional student, where she recently became a member of the Student Dietetic Association.

Held hopes her involvement benefits students now and in the future.

"I think that making things better for future students is really important, and you should always leave things better than you found them," Held said. "If no one gave back to the school, things would never change or get better. Then where would we be? I appreciate everything that those who have come before me did, and I want to provide those same experiences and opportunities to those who come after me."

Events planned to promote nonviolence, healthy living on campus, community

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Just as it is important for humans to maintain a healthy diet, it is important to maintain healthy, nonviolent relationships with one's self, others and the world, said Susan Allen, director of nonviolence education at K-State.

"Social nutrition is thinking about problems in society before there is an in-balance or a problem occurs," Allen said.

From Feb. 2 to March 15, K-State will be celebrating "A Season for Nonviolence" 2008. Events are scheduled for the two months between the anniversaries of the assassinations of two globally recognized leaders of nonviolent change, Mohandas Gandhi, who was killed Jan. 30, 1948, and Martin Luther King, Jr., who was shot April 4, 1968, Allen said.

The events are geared toward helping people think about how they can be well-balanced individuals, Allen said.

"Americans in particular have been taught to wait for the crisis before we attend the problem," she said.

According to the Association for Global New Thought Web site, www.agnt.org, the purpose of the 64-day season is to create an awareness of nonviolent principles and practices as a powerful way to heal, transform and empower peoples' lives and communities.

Kate Boysen, senior in Spanish and sociology and student coordinator for the season, said the events will show students how they can do little things to practice nonviolence in their own lives.

Events such as Adopt-a-Highway this Saturday promote having a healthy relationship with the environment, Boysen said. Other events like "Making Food Your Friend Again" will promote healthy body image and inner peace.

"We want students to learn you don't have to be Ghandi or King to study nonviolence," Boysen said.

A SEASON FOR NONVIOLENCE EVENTS INCLUDE:

Saturday, Feb. 2: Adopt-A-Highway cleanup of Kansas Highway 177, 10 a.m. to noon. Volunteers will meet at the scenic overlook south of Manhattan on the west side of the highway. Bring gloves and a sack lunch. Sponsored by the K-State Social Justice Alliance.

Saturday and Sunday, Feb. 2-3: "G.I. Rights" workshop for lawyers, social workers, clergy and concerned citizens. Topics include discharge, discrimination, sexual orientation and conscientious-objector status. For location, time and registration, contact Anne Cowan at 785-537-2025 or e-mail mapj@mapj.org. Sponsored by the Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice, Unitarian Universalist Social Action and the Mennonite Church. Continuing education credits are available.

Monday, Feb. 11: "What is Progressive Spirituality?" at 4 p.m. in Room 207 of the K-State Student Union. Michael Nelson of the Unitarian Universalist Fellowship and F. Matt Cobb, Mercy Hospital chaplain, will show how the spiritual progressive network connects with nonviolence. Evening meditation will follow from 5:15-6 p.m.

Wednesday, Feb. 13: "Let's Talk It Out: Compassionate Communication in Relationships" at 7 p.m. in Room 212 of the Union. Discussion will be led by Molly Traffas of the Peace and Justice Center of South Central Kansas. It is sponsored by ACTION and Alpha Phi Alpha.

Thursday, Feb. 21: "Violence/Nonviolence and Disability" at 7 p.m. in Room 213 of the Union. This is a presentation by Ann Fahrbach Branden from the Kansas Department of Health and Environment and Stephanie Sanford of the Prairie Independent Living Resource Center in Hutchinson. It is sponsored by emPower Cats and Campaign for Nonviolence ACTION.

Monday, Feb. 25: "Making Food Your Friend Again" at 7 p.m. in the Union Ballroom, presented by Jessica Setnick, a speaker with the National Eating Disorders Awareness Week. It is sponsored by Sensible Nutrition And Body Image Choices, K-State Student Governing Association and Lafene Health Center.

Monday, March 10: Nonviolent martial arts, including aikido, tae kwon do, yoga and tai chi, noon to 1 p.m. in Union Courtyard. Sponsored by Aikido Club and Campaign for Nonviolence ACTION.

Saturday, March 15: St. Patrick's Day Parade: Walk with the "Whirled Peas for World Peace" group. Call 785-532-6444 for location information.

FRIDAY FACTOID

17,000 meals per week served at Derby Dining Center

By Joe Vossen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

How much food does Derby Dining Center make each week for residents?

Learning to cook might be one of the first survival skills learned in college. For the less-motivated student, microwave dinners are acceptable, and carry-out is always another option for those who are completely helpless in the kitchen.

Maybe that is why so many students choose the ease and simplicity of residence-hall life and the prepared meals that come with it.

Mark Edwards, director of Derby Dining Center, said his facility serves dinner for more than 1,400 people each day.

Derby Dining Center, known to campus residents as "the Derby," is the largest dining facility on campus (there are two others — Kramer and Van Zile dining centers). Located between Ford, Haymaker, Moore and West halls, it feeds the 2,000 residents in the four halls of the Derby Complex.

Edwards said he conducted usage surveys and determined in one week the Derby serves: 17,000 meals; about 1,600 hamburger patties, ground and formed by K-State's Weber Hall; and about 550 gallons of whole, skim and chocolate milk, which is provided by K-State dairy cows and processed at Call Hall.

Edwards said it is hard to determine just how many pounds of food are consumed (and thrown away) at the Derby.

"We have so many different menu choices and selections," he said. "There are at least five or six different restaurant concepts running at one time."

The dining facility puts $12,000 in the pockets of student employees each week, Edwards said.

"The earliest workers arrive at 5:30 in the morning and work until 2:30 in the afternoon," he said. "A later shift arrives at 10:30 and works until 7:30 at night. We have a number of employees working until 8:30 or 9:30 at night at Dashers [a grab'n'go option]."

"It's a seven-day operation," Edwards said. "We never close except for breaks."

Preference depends on mood

"Call of Duty 4"

Review by Brandon Steinert

"First-person shooter" is probably the most crowded genre of the video game world, but only a few manage to capture the imagination of gamers.

"Halo 3" and "Call of Duty 4" are two games that stood out in the crowd last year. "COD4" outsold "Halo 3" last year, even though the latter had nearly two months of shelf time over the former. Both add to already great series, but which one is better? It simply depends on the person.

The science-fiction-themed "Halo 3" is colorful with alien enemies, space ships and tele-ports. So, if you like futuristic games, you won't go wrong with Halo 3.

For those loyal to the series — or until they saw the terrible ending in "Halo 2" — "Halo 3" makes up for it with a riveting finale. It's worth the short five-hour wait period to get to the end. Don't skip the credits, especially if you finish in Legendary mode.

Where "Halo 3" really shines is its multiplayer format. Having three of your buddies on the same screen with you while you play random teams from around the world is unbeatable. It's simply one of the best social experiences available in video games, just short of "Rock Band" or "Guitar Hero," of course.

"Call of Duty 4" is more realistic. Infinity Ward, the game's designer, did its best to create the most real-sounding weapons. The campaign mode is filled with explosives and plenty of trigger time, and it is set in a very near future.

The shortfall of "COD4" is you can't have multiple players on one screen and still play online. For competitive gamers, it won't matter much. But for people like me who like to relax with their friends while playing, the social aspect is missing. I make up for it by playing online with some of my friends from home who would otherwise not be sitting next to me anyway.

I'll be playing "COD4" when nobody's around and "Halo 3" when I need to share the screen.

COURTESY ART

Andrew Volpe and Tim Convy formed Ludo in St. Louis during spring 2003. Now a five-member rock band, the group has released two independent label albums and performed several times in Manhattan. The group plays tonight at KatHouse Lounge in Aggieville.

Group seeks different sound, lyrics

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They're just five guys who want to make music and live their motto: "entertain people without making them dumber."

Ludo, a St. Louis-based rock band, will perform tonight at KatHouse Lounge.

"It's commentary on the lowest common denominator of entertainment that's out there," said Ludo member Tim Convy about the group's motto. "A lot of the music that people are making doesn't give you anything, and it's a waste of time. I wouldn't go so far as to say we're trying to change the world, but it should make people think a little bit, and you should get something out of it."

Ludo features Convy on Moog synthesizer, keyboards and vocals; Andrew Volpe, vocals and guitar; Tim Ferrell, vocals and guitar; Marshall Fanciullo, bass; and Matt Palermo, vocals and drums.

"You're Awful, I Love You," the group's third album, is set for release on Feb. 26. Ludo recorded the album, its first on a major label, in Los Angeles with producer Matt Wallace, who also has worked with Maroon 5, Train and Faith No More.

"Love Me Dead" is the first single and lead track from "You're Awful, I Love You." The song's first verse declares "Kill me romantically/ Fill my soul with vomit/Then ask me for a piece of gum/Bitter and dumb/ You're my sugarplum/You're awful, I love you."

Convy said Volpe wrote the song about his and other band members' ex-girlfriends and how they were horrible relationships that everyone else but those in the relationships saw.

"They were just so caught up in being in the relationship — whether it was how hot the girl was or whatever else — that they just didn't see this was a life-draining, horrible person," Convy said.

While Ludo is a rock band, its lyrics address topics that other rock bands don't, Convy said. He also said the band isn't polarized as either happy or sad; the music addresses a range of emotions.

"I think we tap into other emotions with our songs," Convy said, "and songs like 'Love Me Dead' show that you can feel both in certain situations and relationships. A lot of our songs tell stories and create characters, and it's got a fantastical, fantasy element to it."

Tonight is not Ludo's first performance in Manhattan; the group also has performed at PJ's Pub. Convy said Ludo members are fans of Manhattan-based bands Ultimate Fakebook and Pomeroy.

"We've got nothing but good thoughts about Manhattan," Convy said.

FRIEND LASHES OUT AT BRITNEY'S MOM: 'SHE'S ONLY CONCERNED WITH HERSELF'

Sam Lutfi, Britney Spears' close friend and self-proclaimed manager, is lashing out Thursday morning at Lynne Spears while speaking exclusively to Access Hollywood.

When Sam was asked how he and Lynne Spears were getting along following Britney's second hospitalization, he sounded off, saying he does not think Lynne cares about Britney.

"No. Her mother is not someone who cares about her daughter, she's only concerned with herself. Sad but true. She was too busy getting a manicure to come over yesterday, despite her daughters pleas. Sad, very sad," Sam wrote to Access in a text message.

JUSTIN TIMBERLAKE TAKES A BEATING FOR SUPER BOWL AD

Justin Timberlake is heading back to the Super Bowl.

This time however, the former half-time performer has lined up a new spot in one of the big game's hugely anticipated commercial breaks.

In a new Pepsi spot set to air during Sunday's game, but already making the rounds online, Timberlake finds himself at the mercy of a bikini clad, soda-sucking brunette.

With each sip of her cool beverage, Timberlake is hoisted, slammed and yanked closer to the girl, but put in the way of plenty of traffic, mailbox poles and serious situations.

CLOONEY TAKES ON ROLE AS U.N. PEACEMAKER

In his new role as United Nations messenger of peace, George Clooney was playing himself.

The 46-year-old actor's arrival Thursday was greeted with "oohs" and "ahs" from dozens of people, mostly women, who crowded the lobby entrance for a glimpse and cell phone picture of him.

"Hi guys!" he said, stopping only briefly to pose for a picture with his parents and shake a few hands.

Clooney was touring the U.N. headquarters for a ceremony marking his designation for the special job by Secretary General Ban Ki-moon. He was just back from a trip to Sudan's Darfur region, arriving in the U.S. by way of India, a major contributor of U.N. peacekeeping troops.

MOVIE REVIEWS

"Atonement"

★★★★☆
Reviews by Brendan Praeger

"Atonement" has emerged as one of the most critically acclaimed films of the year, earning dozens of awards and landing on the majority of critics' top ten lists.

With all this in mind, I entered the theater with high expectations, and for the most part I was not disappointed.

"Atonement" displays passionate performances from Keira Knightley, James McAvoy and 13-year-old Saoirse Ronan, it expertly shifts perspectives to show important scenes from multiple points of view, and as a romance, it avoids sappiness and sentimentality while still weaving a story that will stick with you long after leaving the theater.

Based on the novel by Ian McEwan, "Atonement" follows Briony Tallis (Ronan), who changes the course of several lives when she accuses her older sister's (Knightley) lover (McAvoy) of a crime he did not commit.

After prison, McAvoy's character leaves for WWII, and the romance struggles to survive.

The most impressive point in the film comes in the form of a 4.5-minute tracking shot on a war torn beach in France. For a moment, the incredible cinematography almost overtakes the storytelling, but director Joe Wright (Pride and Prejudice) quickly brings us back to the ground by handling multiple story lines with alarming efficiency.

"Atonement" doesn't top my list of favorite films from 2007, but it isn't an experience I'll soon forget. It should fill the void for any romance fan sick of empty romantic comedies and sappy Nicholas Sparks novels.

"Rambo"

From the second "A Sylvester Stallone Film" flashed across the film in an absurdly cheesy stenciled font, I knew "Rambo" wasn't going to be a great movie, but I knew I'd love it anyway.

After last year's surprisingly decent "Rocky Balboa," it makes sense for Stallone to revive another stagnant franchise. Rambo is still a well-known character, but the most recent addition to the franchise came in 1988, when many current K-State students hadn't yet learned to walk, let alone appreciate the mindless violence the series does so well.

The story is straightforward and provides numerous opportunities for physical conflict while doing its best to avoid morality or character development. After spending the last 20 years in Thailand, John Rambo agrees to lead a group of Christian aid workers into war-torn Burma. After they are predictably captured by local warlords, Rambo joins a group of mercenaries on the rescue mission.

From there, the movie plays like a checklist of clichéd action scenes and testosterone-fueled fantasies. Rambo forges a machete, rips a man's throat out with his bare hands and detonates a forgotten WWII bomb dropped by the English.

According to a handy chart at www.slashfilm.com, 3.04 people die per minute, and for the first time in the series, Stallone leaves his shirt on the entire time.

In all fairness, "Rambo" has numerous flaws that I would usually be hard pressed to overlook. The dialogue is usually terrible, most of the character development is weak and many of the scenes are undeniably absurd. But despite its shortcomings, "Rambo" is a thoroughly enjoyable film.

Much like "Rocky Balboa," "Rambo" provides an appropriate conclusion to the story of one of Stallone's best-known characters. The last scene is almost touching in the way it provides closure to a man who goes to great lengths to avoid sentimentality.

I had originally laughed when Stallone announced his intention to make a fourth, and possibly fifth "Rambo" movie.

World briefs

MEXICAN FOUNDER OF CONSERVATIVE ORDER DIES

VATICAN CITY — The Rev. Marcial Maciel, a Mexican priest who founded the Legionaries of Christ religious order and was disciplined by Pope Benedict XVI after sex abuse allegations, has died in the United States, his order said Thursday.

He was 87. Maciel died Wednesday of natural causes, the conservative religious order said on its Web site. The statement, which called Maciel the "beloved founding father," did not say exactly where he died.

The Vatican has not said whether it determined the accusations by former seminarians that Maciel had sexually abused them were true.

But in 2006, a year after Benedict's election as pontiff, the Vatican said Maciel had been asked to conduct "a reserved life of prayer and penance, renouncing every public-ministry," meaning he could not celebrate Mass in public.

The action effectively meant he was a priest in name only.

Maciel was the most prominent Roman Catholic Church official to be disciplined by the Vatican for alleged involvement in child sexual abuse.

He and the Legionaries denied the allegations. When he was disciplined, the order said he had accepted the Vatican's decision with "tranquility of conscience."

DESPERATE KENYANS TURN TO GANGS FOR PROTECTION

NAIROBI, Kenya — As Kenya splits along ethnic lines and the body count spirals, desperate residents say they are turning to once-hated gangs for protection.

One gang recruiter in Nairobi said she receives about 30 calls daily from people seeking membership, and politicians — including a government minister — are offering money for weapons to fuel the furor over the presidential election.

At a camp for displaced families in Nairobi's Mathare slum, she led the crowd in a Kikuyu song before asking those whose homes were burned or looted whether they would consider joining the Mungiki gang.

Much of the postelection violence has pitted President Mwai Kibaki's Kikuyu against other ethnic groups.

"If we are many, we can go and chase those people," she explained, the ragged crowd staring at her designer sunglasses and gold high heels delicately poised above the mud. "This is the time to join us."

Hands shot up around the circle.

Elsewhere in the slums, recruitment is under way by gangs associated with other tribes. The Taliban, for example, is made up of members of opposition leader Raila Odinga's Luo people.

ONE OF AL-QAIDA'S TOP COMMANDERS KILLED IN PAKISTAN

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — A missile from a U.S. Predator drone struck a suspected terrorist safehouse in Pakistan and killed a top al-Qaida commander believed responsible for a brazen bomb attack during a visit last year by Vice President Cheney to Afghanistan, a U.S. official said Thursday.

The strike that killed Abu Laith al-Libi was conducted Monday night or early Tuesday, said the official, who would neither confirm nor deny that the U.S. carried it out. The attack was against a facility in Pakistan's north Waziristan region, the lawless tribal area bordering Afghanistan.

The killing of such a ma-jeor al-Qaida figure is likely to embarrass President Pervez Musharraf, who has repeatedly said he would not sanction U.S. military action against al-Qaida members believed to be regrouping in the wild borderlands near Afghanistan.

The strike killed an estimated 12 people, including Arabs, Turkmen from central Asia and local Taliban members, according to an intelligence official in the area who spoke on condition of anonymity.

SUICIDE BOMBER KILLS AFGHAN OFFICIAL

KANDAHAR, Afghanistan — A suicide bomber blew himself up Thursday in a mosque in southern Afghanistan, killing a deputy provincial governor and five other people in another blow to President Hamid Karzai's U.S.-backed government.

The Taliban claimed responsibility for the attack, which came as U.S. officials were warning that the six-year mission to stabilize Afghanistan faces a crisis due to Taliban resilience and weakening international resolve.

Pir Mohammad, deputy governor of Helmand province, was attending noon prayers at the mosque in the provincial capital of Lashkar

Gah when the bomber struck, according to police chief Mohammad Hussein Andiwai.

At least 18 people, including two children, were wounded by the blast, Andiwai said.

Haji Ikramullah, who was walking to the mosque when the explosion occurred, said he saw bodies inside and wounded people shrieking in pain.

A Taliban spokesman, Zabiullah Mujahid, claimed responsibility for the attack, which he said was carried out by an Afghan named Qudratullah from the eastern province of Paktia, one of the centers of Taliban resistance.

Egyptian students charged with carrying 'bombs' near base actually had fireworks

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TAMPA, Fla. — Two Egyptian college students arrested near a South Carolina Navy weapons station last year were carrying low-grade fireworks, as they claimed, not the dangerous explosives as charged by federal prosecutors, the FBI has determined.

Ahmed Abdellatif Sherif Mohamed, 26, and Youssef Samir Megahed, 21, have been in jail since sheriff's deputies found what they called bomb-making materials in the trunk of their car during a traffic stop near Charleston, S.C.

The FBI report was submitted to the court Wednesday by Megahed's public defender as part of a motion seeking bail.

U.S. Attorney's Office spokesman Steve Cole declined comment on the filing Thursday.

The two men, both engineering students at the University of South Florida, were indicted on federal charges of transporting explosives illegally.

The FBI report said the items found in the trunk of the car — PVC pipe containing a mixture of sugar, potassium nitrate and cat litter — are ingredients for a "pyrote-technic mixture" that burned but didn't explode in tests.

"Simply put, based on the FBI expert testing, the PVC pipes found in the trunk of the vehicle were harmless pyrotechnic materials similar to those found in fireworks and road flares," wrote public defender Adam Allen in a motion asking a judge to reconsider letting Megahed out on bail.

Allen said the testing corroborates Mohamed's claim that he was interested in fireworks and bought ingredients to make his own "sugar rockets."

The materials don't meet the legal definition of explosives, Allen said.

Still problematic for Mohamed is a video found on a laptop in the car in which, prosecutors contend, he demonstrates how to convert a remote-control toy into a detonator for a bomb.

According to an FBI affidavit, he told authorities that he made the video "to assist those persons in Arabic countries to defend themselves against the infidels invading their countries."

Besides the explosives charge, Mohamed faces a terrorism-related count of demonstrating how to use a destructive device for violence.

According to the FBI, the laptop also contained stored information on building destructive explosives. Bullets and gun-cleaning kits also were found in the car, the FBI said.

Allen contends Megahed didn't know anything about the information on the laptop.

Also he claims he didn't know about the items in the trunk of the car Mohamed was driving when he was stopped for speeding.

Allen said the students were on an innocent road trip to Sunset Beach, N.C., which was the destination programmed into the GPS unit in the car.

But a federal judge who denied bail for Megahed in October wasn't convinced.

He said that the evidence available at the time "fails to establish or even suggest any innocent or wholesome explanation for the events" that led to the arrest of the students.

Megahed is a permanent resident of the United States who lives in Tampa with his family and was nearing graduation.

Mohamed was a civil engineering graduate student who came to the university in January.

He was in the country on a student visa.

Stress-free day

Take time to breathe throughout the stressful wedding planning process

As a newlywed, I felt it important to share some advice with brides working through the planning process.

There are many essential details to remember while planning what should be one of the happiest days of your life. Because this day comes with such expectations and an expensive price tag, the stress can be completely overwhelming.

However, there is a way to prevent mental breakdowns, petty arguments and miscommunications while keeping your head in place all the while. Taking time for yourself throughout the process is crucial to prevent oversteering, or as some like to call it, becoming bridezilla.

Now, the key to having time for you is keeping the wedding out of it. It's important to do non-wedding activities at least one hour every week throughout the wedding process.

It will soon become a time where you can look forward to relaxing and keeping your stress levels down each week.

NICOLE JOHNSTON

An obvious choice for time out is a romantic dinner with your groom. Without talking about the stressful planning, you'll be able to focus on the qualities that brought you this far.

There are many places in Manhattan that would be great for relaxing. The Frank Anneberg Park, 3801 Anderson Ave., offers various options for activity.

With a stocked lake, picnic areas, sports fields, batting cages, miniature golfing and a wildlife and nature trail the park is an inexpensive escape from wedding stress.

Girlfriend time is another great way to relax. Spending time at the spa can take your mind off the planning.

I found it very helpful to get a pedicure every couple weeks because it is a relaxing way to avoid feeling frazzled.

If you are on a tight budget, both American Academy of Hair

Design and Crum's Beauty College have affordable prices on spa services.

If primping is not your thing, going to the rec can be a good chance to get in some alone time and reduce your stress levels. Getting a regular workout is one of the most effective ways to take control of stress.

Catching a matinee at the movie theatre is also an inexpensive way to take some time off.

By reducing your stress, your mind will be clearer to handle the wedding chaos. This, might I add, WILL happen.

Accepting that something chaotic will happen on your wedding day is the first step to being prepared to handle whatever might come your way.

If you control your stress, you'll be ready to tackle anything.

If you let all the planning get to you, it will be hard to enjoy the day you've wrapped the past year around.

SAVE THE DATE

Save the date cards are a fun and efficient way of assuring that your guests will have enough time to plan time off for your wedding. There are many ways of sending them, from cookies to magnets to pinwheels. Make sure to send them out at least six months before the big day and remember, these won't replace the invitation.

Couples should avoid often-celebrated days

By Elise Nimitz
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

2008 is going to be an exciting year with the summer Olympics and a presidential election taking place. Planning a wedding this year is bound to result in some scheduling conflicts, but the big day should ultimately be devoted to one couple and not some other event happening on the same day.

To ensure the focus stays on the nuptials celebration, here are some dates to avoid when planning ahead.

K-STATE GAME DAYS

Steer clear of Saturdays in the fall when the Wildcats are playing at home. This will please fans invited to the wedding, and finding hotel rooms and a space for the reception will be easier.

Jenn Alley, sales manager at the Clarion Hotel, said the hotel agrees to a contract with K-State two years in advance to have the team stay there Friday before a game and use the ballroom on Saturday.

She said people tend to choose other wedding dates because the use of the ballroom depends on how early kickoff is for the home games — usually determined a week before the game.

HOLIDAYS

Independence Day falls on a Friday this year, and while some consider it classy to have a red-, white- and blue-themed wedding on Fourth-of-July weekend, couples should examine all angles of a decision to say their vows on a widely recognized holiday.

Hosting a wedding on a day people typically make other plans is not considerate toward guests. Matt

Christensen, senior in English and Spanish, said he recently attended a wedding on New Year's Eve.

He said not only was he distracted by the cold but also by the number of calls he got from friends partying elsewhere.

"I can say that if a person is to choose a wedding date and they really want a winter wedding, choose a date that, when you look back on it, is not a date that is already celebrated by, well, everyone," said Christensen, who was married last summer.

POPULAR DATES

Ask around about what dates have already been snatched up by engaged couples, and a pattern emerges. Some couples have picked up on the novelty of dates like June 7 and August 8. However, it seems like everyone thought it would be interesting to use these dates, so don't be surprised if you have two or more weddings to attend when they roll around.

It's also important to remember other events specific to where the wedding will take place. Eryn Wood, senior in secondary education, said she and her fiancé picked their July 26 date to avoid wheat and corn harvest in southwest Kansas.

Above all, remember the date does not have to be set in stone. Not yet, anyway. Wood said if it was early enough and something came up, she would be willing to change her date.

"I guess if your announcement was already in the paper, you could print a correction," Wood said. "There's still time, just as long as the invitations weren't already sent out."

Web sites offer help for wedding planning

By Katie Starzec
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Planning a wedding can be stressful, but when it's all said and done, couples get what they want, when they want it, when they make their own plans.

In many Internet resources, husbands- and wives-to-be have access to a lot of information and tips to make their big day wonderful, memorable and affordable.

Hiring a wedding planner can make the process less stressful.

However, if couples are on a tight budget, or just want to be able to make all the decisions, spearheading the project might be a better option.

"As far as planning it yourself, the basics are the most important priority," said wedding event planner Mandy Fogo of Waters Party and Wedding in Manhattan.

She said locations, catering services, photographers, musicians and flowers book quickly, so they should be chosen before the cake topper and the silverware.

Many planners tap into the Internet's potential. Sites like www.theKnot.com and www.weddingchannel.com to provide planning tools like wedding checklists and budget sheets, along with ideas for the reception, the cake and even hairstyles.

Tips for winter or outdoor weddings are on the Web sites also.

For those who want to see options in person, couples can also attend local bridal fairs.

"They're really helpful, because it's local people and businesses," said Rebecca Kriesch, K-State alumna.

For her wedding, she chose a cake and disc jockey services at a bridal fair in Manhattan. By attending fairs, buying planning books and using the Internet, Kriesch planned her wedding while she was still in college.

"Planning for my baby was harder than planning for the wedding," Kriesch said with a laugh.

Now that she has a full-time job, Kriesch said she thinks it was easier to plan for the wedding while in school, since she had the whole summer to "hit it hard."

When planning, couples might want to consider what is most important, though.

"You look in the magazines, and you want to spend a lot of money," said Melissa Pickett, graduate student in grain science, "but it's funny how little that stuff matters on the wedding day. I wanted to be picky, but looking back, we could've settled on a lot less."

Pickett said she and her mother planned her small-town wedding.

She said couples can be overwhelmed by bridal fairs and planning sites, because brides often feel like they need to use everything that's available, but financially it might not be as easy as it looks.

As for location, Pickett said a wedding in Kansas City would have provided more options, but the community aspect of the small-town ceremony was a more sentimental choice.

Friends helped with the reception, and her mom made the table arrangements. Also the local grocery store catered the reception dinner.

Both Kriesch and Pickett said they are happy with how their ceremonies turned out.

Both brides got what they wanted because they took the planning into their own hands.

SIX | Lawrence-native replaces former AG

Kangas, political director of the Kansas Republican Party. "We're cautiously optimistic. There's a big deficit there and he'll have to work really hard to try and overcome that deficit and restore the office."

The credibility lost by Morrison's actions leave Six in a battle to not only serve Kansas citizens but also to regain their trust.

State Rep. Paul Davis, D-Lawrence, said he believes that Six has the tools to win this fight.

"I think that with the scandal that has erupted for Paul Morrison and a lot of the controversy surrounding [former attorney general] Phill Kline, there is a dire need for someone to restore integrity and confidence to that position, and I think he is absolutely the right person to do that," Davis said.

After knowing Six for several years, Davis said that his background as a lawyer and judge should benefit Kansas.

"I have known him for many years and have seen him as a judge and as an attorney, and he is somebody who has tremendous integrity and makes decisions based on law and not on politics," Davis said. "I think having someone who is first and foremost a lawyer instead of a politician is exactly what we need at this time."

Six officially begins work today.

for young, black voters. Brooks said this problem hinges on the quality of education they are receiving and their access to higher education.

Another issue, in addition to economy and education, is the justice system and how it affects young, black people. The Iraq War was another issue of concern, but apparently not a top priority for young black people, Brooks said.

"It's time to focus on what's happening here at home," Foust said.

Brooks said the Black Youth Vote campaign is currently conducting a poll of young people to determine what issues need attention. The goal of the campaign, he said, is to develop leadership skills in the "next generation" to engage in its own civic process and community.

"It's important ... to not only get plugged in, but to understand the process, and not be intimidated by the process," Brooks said.

"[We're] trying to break that cycle of apathy."

Foust said the K-State chapter of Delta Sigma Theta has made its own efforts to encourage young people to vote. The sorority hosted a "Crimson and Cream Week," — named for the sorority's colors — this week, offering voter-registration cards at its booth in the K-State Student Union and encouraging students to vote in the upcoming Kansas caucuses. The sorority also handed out pamphlets about each candidate in the Democratic and Republican party, showing no bias, just educating the student body on platforms of each candidate.

The sorority also presented a candidate forum, where former Kansas Gov. John Carlin and K-State's chapters of the Young Democrats and Young Republicans spoke about current issues.

"[We're interested in] what candidates are doing to meet our needs," Foust said, "and what particular items on the ballot are going to affect us most."

CHOOSING THE BEST

K-State's nationally recognized student recruitment programs have received an added boost this year from sophomores Paul Mintner and Kelsey Moran. The two are the coordinators of the K-State Scholars recruitment effort, operated through New Student Services.

"[We are] responsible for personally scheduling campus visits for around 500 high achieving prospective students each semester," said Mintner. Visiting high school students have their days meticulously planned by Mintner and Moran, ensuring the prospective students have a campus tour, meet with faculty in their academic areas of interest and learn more about leadership opportunities and scholarships.

"The K-State Scholars program is an effort to showcase the best of K-State and convince them this university is the best environment for their academic and professional development," Mintner said, adding the project is in the first year of its existence.

"This summer there was a conversation between several K-State scholarship recipients, faculty members, and Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco about how to recruit these kinds of students to K-State," Mintner said. "This program was born from that vision."

Mintner's one and a half years at K-State have been demanding but gratifying, and being involved has been the hallmark of his short time on campus.

"There are so many amazing opportunities and people at K-State," he said. "Getting involved can be hard work, but it's so worthwhile in the long run."

AUSTEN | Author's books important globally

dent at the same time.

Wood explained that in other countries, people are more interested in the integrity of a parent-child relationship, but in the United States, she said, people are inherently interested in rebelling against authority, since the U.S. was born through rebellion.

"Americans see rebellion and think that's the way it has to be," Wood said.

But people from other cultures better understand the tension that Austen's characters face. They are striving to be independent, yet are connected to their families, Wood said.

Yu said the Chinese people identify more with the idea that marriage involves not just the couple but the families as well.

"It's not just about love in the romantic way we think about it," she said. "It's about family, about connecting with people."

She said in Austen's era, and in other parts of the world, marriage is about doing what is most appropriate for everyone involved.

To demonstrate how many people read Austen's novels, Yu and Wood read off some languages that the books have translated into. Italian, Korean, Japanese, Chinese, and many others were named.

Audience member Sharon Smith, a Manhattan resident, said she thought Austen's "remarkable facility with language" and the way she formed her plots around relationships made her books appeal to many cultures.

"That's what life means to us - the feeling we get when we relate to others," Smith said. "I think that's the universal part."

Parking free for Ferrell's show

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A free screening of Will Ferrell's "Semi-Pro" will take place today for the first 60 people in attendance.

The screening of Ferrell's new movie will take place at 1 p.m. at Carmike Seth Childs 12, 2610 Farm Bureau Road. The movie has a Feb. 29 release date.

Ferrell's performance tonight at Bramlage Coliseum is sold out, with seating accommodations for about 7,000 people. Doors to Bramlage open at 7 p.m. for the 8 p.m. show time.

Free parking also is available for students tonight at Bramlage. Parking lots open at 6:30 p.m., and students must present their K-State IDs and tickets for admittance. General public members must pay $5 for parking.

K-State is Ferrell's first stop among seven universities on his nationwide college comedy tour "Will Ferrell's Funny or Die Comedy Tour Presented by Semi-Pro."

The performance also will feature comedians Zach Galifianakis, Demetri Martin and Nick Swardson. Each comedian will perform their standup routines for about 30 minutes.

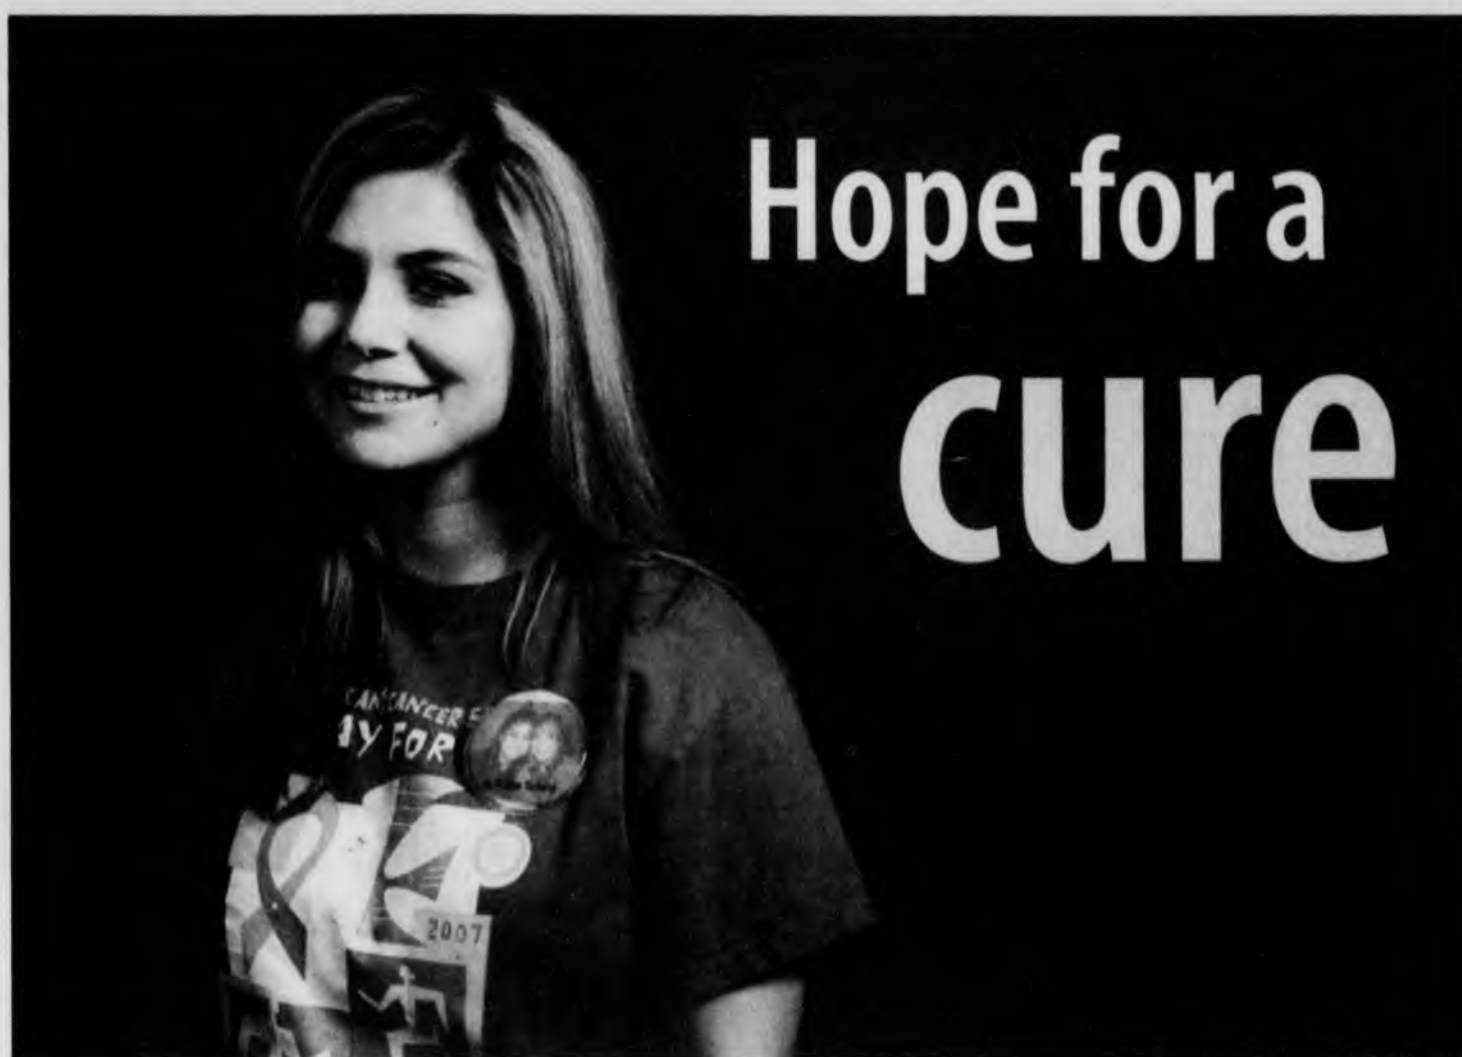

Ferrell and his creative team will perform improvisation or skits at the show's start, in between each comedian's routine and at the finale, said Ben Hopper, Union Program Council program adviser.

UPC members negotiated with Ferrell's agent for three months last semester before he signed a contract for his performance.

A free screening of Will Ferrell's "Semi-Pro" will take place at 1 p.m. today at Carmike Seth Childs 12 for the first 60 people in attendance.

Trini Najera, senior in family studies and human services, is a cancer survivor. She said she wants to let other people know what they can do to help in the fight against cancer.

Cancer survivor tells story to advocate Relay for Life

By Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After witnessing her mother fight two different kinds of cancer, and then battling the disease herself, Trini Najera decided to fight back in a way different from chemotherapy and doctor visits.

She became involved in the American Cancer Society's Relay for Life.

According to cancer.org, Relay for Life is a fun-filled overnight event the American Cancer Society designed to celebrate survivorship and raise money for research and programs of the ACS.

Trini said this is exactly what she needed after dealing with cancer in her family.

Trini's mother was diagnosed with cervical cancer at age 22 and during Trini's junior year in high school, her mother also was diagnosed with liver cancer. Trini, senior in family studies and human services, said it was difficult to witness the challenges her mother went through daily, especially while her mother was undergoing treatment.

"I saw how the chemo wore her down, the medicines made her drowsy, have hair loss, weight loss and forgetfulness — it was hard," Trini said.

After Trini herself was diagnosed with cervical cancer during her junior year at K-State, she said it was difficult being at K-State, especially being away from her mother. She said she would never have been able to make it without the support from her friends at K-State and her family back home.

Now a survivor of cancer, Trini said she wants people to know her story, but most importantly, she wants people to know what they can do to help in the fight against cancer.

"Don't do it by yourself; there is help out there, and hold on to your friends and family," Trini said. "Support gets you through it and knowing that there are people out there that care for you, you just have to reach out to them."

She said it was a rough year, but because the cancer was in its early stages she did not have to go through chemotherapy. Now with the cancer clear, she only has to have checkups every six months.

"I hope in my lifetime there will be a cure," Trini said.

She also said people who have family members with cancer should go to a doctor and get checked. Also, she suggests living a healthy lifestyle to help prevent or reduce the spread of cancer in the body.

Trini first participated in Relay for Life with her sorority as a team captain and now works on the committee, she said, helping the staff with press releases and advocating Relay for Life.

Last year Relay for Life raised $58,000 and this year she said she hopes the organization will raise $70,000. The money raised goes to

Gala raises cardiac awareness

By Amanda Keim
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Guests removed their coats to reveal elegant candy-apple red dresses and stylish jet-black tuxedos. Waiters and waitresses offering sparkling water and bubbling champagne greeted them at the entrance. The sounds of soft jazz echoed from a second room where a live band stood playing sweet, sultry music.

After facing a personal experience in which a family member dealt with cardiac troubles, Belinda Snyder decided it was time for a change. She said she could no longer race back and forth between Manhattan and Kansas City for appointments. So, in 2004, Snyder led the first "A Dress the Heart Gala."

"It was a chance to raise money for the cardiac initiative and awareness and to equip the Mercy Health Care Center," Snyder said.

According to www.merchyhealthcenter.org, the Cardiac Initiative is a community-led program to aid in the expansion of local cardiac services in order to increase access to heart care in the Manhattan area.

hatten area.

"It has been very successful," Snyder said. "This is the fourth year and in the previous three years we've raised over $206,000."

The money raised during the last three years has contributed to the purchase of a 64-slice CT scanner, recruitment of two new cardiologists and the establishment of The Heart Institute at Mercy.

This year's gala sold 240 tickets at $100 each. Various organizations and companies also made donations for a total of $107,000, Snyder said. Including the profits of the gala's first auction, Snyder estimated a grand total of about $120,000.

Beach museum sponsors card decorating

Timmy Keeter, 3, dripped a glob of glue onto a small box, attempting to make a Valentine's gift for his father.

His mother, Denise Keeter, Manhattan resident, brought her three children to the Beach Museum of Art on Sunday for a Valentine's Day workshop. The Valentines this family made, however, celebrated another occasion in addition to the national holiday.

Their father, Robb Keeter, returns home on Valentine's Day this year after a five-month tour of duty in Iraq. He will be home for a couple of weeks before returning to serve for another 10 months.

"We're excited," Denise Keeter said. "It's a good reason to make Valentines this year."

Rachel Keeter recently visited the museum on a field trip with her class. It was through the field trip that Denise Keeter found out about the Valentine's Day workshop, she said.

Parents and grandparents with their children of all ages crowded around tables covered in glue, lace, pink paper and red ribbons. This Valentine-making workshop was one of four workshops that the Beach Museum's Student Friends organization puts on each year.

"I'm so thankful that the Beach Museum does this," Denise Keeter said. "For a mom not having to do all the clean-up, it's money well-spent."

For $5 per person, the Beach Museum provided a large variety of craft supplies, including paper of all colors and designs, lace

George Washington, the commander of the Continental Army during the Revolutionary War, was unanimously elected the first president of the United States by all 69 presidential electors who cast their votes. John Adams of Massachusetts, who received 34 votes, was elected vice president. The electors, who represented 10 of the 11 states that had ratified the U.S. Constitution, were chosen by popular vote, legislative appointment or a combination of both four weeks before the election.

WEDNESDAY 1952: ELIZABETH II BECOMES QUEEN

In 1952, after a long illness, King George VI of Great Britain and Northern Ireland died in his sleep at the royal estate at Sandringham, England. Princess Elizabeth, the oldest of the king's two daughters and next in line to succeed him, was in Kenya at the time of her father's death; she was crowned Queen Elizabeth II on June 2, 1953, at 27.

THURSDAY 1964: BEATLES ARRIVE IN NEW YORK

On February 7, 1964, Pan Am Yankee Clipper flight 101 from London Heathrow landed at New York's Kennedy Airport — and "Beatlemania" arrived. It was the first visit to the United States by the Beatles, a British rock 'n' roll quartet that had just scored its first No. 1 U.S. hit six days before with "I Want to Hold Your Hand." At Kennedy, the "Fab Four" — dressed in mod suits and sporting their trademark pudding bowl haircuts — were greeted by 3,000 screaming fans who caused a near riot when the boys stepped off their plane and onto American soil.

TUESDAY 1934: HANK AARON IS BORN

On this day in 1934, Henry Louis Aaron Jr., the baseball slugger who broke Babe Ruth's legendary record of 714 homers, was born in Mobile, Ala. Aaron began his professional baseball career in 1952 in the Negro League and joined the Milwaukee Braves of the major league in 1954, eight years after Jackie Robinson had integrated baseball. Aaron was the last Negro League player to compete in the majors. He quickly established himself as an important player for the Braves and won the National League batting title in 1956.

FRIDAY 1924: FIRST EXECUTION BY LETHAL GAS

The first execution by lethal gas in U.S. history was carried out in Carson City, Nev. The executed man was Tong Lee, a member of a Chinese gang who was convicted of murdering a rival gang member. Lethal gas was adopted by Nevada in 1921 as a more humane method of carrying out its death sentences, as opposed to the traditional techniques of execution by hanging, firing squad, or electrocution.

Lethal gas — as a method of carrying out capital punishment — was largely replaced by lethal injection in the late 20th century.

Current issues change image of Black History month

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Over the years, people have celebrated Black History month by learning about contributions made by blacks and commemorating black leaders.

However, the K-State Black Student Union President Bryon Williams said colleges across the nation are changing this trend.

"Colleges are starting to have events that focus on more than history but focuses on current issues, stereotypes and taboos," he said. "In terms of our [college students'] education level, we have created a time to discuss relevant black, racial issues."

During the month of February, there will be several events celebrating Black History Month, including a keynote speech from Julian Bond, chairman of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on Feb. 21.

Williams said the purpose of this year's events is to educate and enlighten students.

Discussions will take place to open communication among the K-State community, including a discussion on the word "nigger" and how it epitomizes hatred and oppression, Williams said.

The theme for K-State's Black History month is "Raising the Bar: Connecting our Past Progress with our Future Ambitions."

The theme sprouted from this year's BSU overall theme: "The Elevation Project," he said, in which Williams has implemented a threefold endeavor to engage, energize and empower the members.

The BSU also has collaborated with other multicultural organizations on campus like the Hispanic American Leadership Organization. H.A.L.O. will co-sponsor the play "Platanos & Collared Greens: Black and Latino Theatrical Production" with BSU on Feb. 20. The romantic comedy play portrays an interracial couple dealing with cultural and racial prejudices.

Uriel Estrada, H.A.L.O. president, said the play is the first step to future event collaboration projects with BSU.

"When you co-sponsor something, you are showing unity between the two organizations and linking that bridge," he said.

Estrada encourages all students of all backgrounds to participate in the Black History Month events.

"A lot of individuals may not realize or understand about some of the boundaries that exist today in society," he said. "These events can serve as a eye-opener."

Man's journey into the wild sets example for celebration of nature

Illustrations Christina Forsberg | COLLEGIAN

In high school, I read Jon Krakauer's "Into the Wild," a true story about Chris McCandless, a young man who was found dead in April 1992 in Alaska. As an impressionable high-school student, I was intrigued by this fascinating story, and I remember finishing the book on the verge of tears.

After a two-year journey along the West Coast, McCandless thought he could survive alone in the Alaskan wilderness. Sadly, he starved to death.

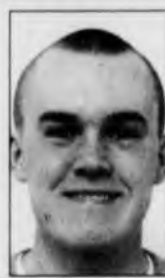

Ever since I read the novel, the story has haunted me. Two years later, during fall 2007, the movie adaptation of the book starring Sean Penn was released in theaters. After I saw the movie, the images of his death made the story more vivid and more intense.

Chris was willing to leave everything — his family, his friends and his education — all for the sake of freedom and a taste of the wild. After graduating from Emory University, he hit the road and never made it back home.

So, what does this story of withdrawal and wanderlust have to do with K-State students? A lot.

The overwhelming tide of technology from Facebook.com, YouTube, iPods and TV makes it easier than ever to experience life vicariously and indirectly.

David Brooks, an editorialist for the New York Times, observed how externalized technology has made us. With his satellite GPS and his BlackBerry, he can call anybody and go anywhere, all at the push of a button.

BLAKE OSBORN

However, there is a whole world technology can never frame — nature. That is what McCandless experienced. And that is what we also should aspire to.

We should learn, as McCandless said in the movie, that "if you want something in life, jump out, and grab it."

I am not suggesting you go alone into the Alaskan wilderness and sustain yourself with berries, rice and game, like McCandless did. Nor am I suggesting technological progress is harmful and should be abandoned.

On your walk through campus this next week, take the time to stop and smell the roses. Weather permitting, try driving out to the Konza Prairie over the weekend, and take a hike.

Richard Louv, former San Diego Union-Tribune columnist and author of "Last Child in the Woods," observed how today's children are growing up with a "denatured childhood." The idea of nature has become more of an abstraction than a reality.

McCandless made that abstraction a reality. He possessed a foot-loose spirit that was willing to venture into nature. Though it cost him his life, he celebrated the grandeur of the wild.

In the movie, McCandless said, "If we can admit that life can be ruled purely by rationality, then all possibility of life is gone."

It is easy to push a button and go with what is familiar. But life and growth are found in the unknown. College is about life experiences outside of your comfort zone.

Thus, McCandless' story should be inspiration for us all to celebrate nature and to experience life with an unfettered passion.

Students should relax, learn to give up control of their lives

With the lack of days off in the spring semester, here are a few thoughts on how students can make life interesting again.

I'm telling you right now — skip class at least twice a month. Just do it. I once heard a friend tell a teacher he just didn't feel like going to class, and the instructor shrugged and moved on.

According to the Web site for the Higher Education Research Institute, 33 percent of college freshmen admit to cutting class occasionally. Several U.S. universities have invested lots of money and time into figuring out why students skip. Their conclusion? Students are simply overwhelmed with the transition to college life.

It is difficult, but very few students choose to skip class because they are having trouble converting to college. In truth, they just can't quite roll out of bed on Friday morning; their need for just one more hour of sleep often overrides the fact that they might miss another round of slides already posted on K-State Online.

If you think the number of gray hairs on your literature professor's head have doubled since Jan. 17, just wait. Keep checking your e-mail before every class; that cancellation will happen. They'll get tired too.

Second, don't pay too much attention to the presidential candidates' campaigns. Ignore them as much as possible. Instead, figure out your own opinion. That might be my job here, but I'm tired of people taking everything so seriously. Chances are you're not going to develop ideas too different from those of your parents, so don't try. Go with your gut. Then visit the candidates' Web sites — or better yet, their Facebook.com profiles — and compare and contrast. Make a Venn diagram for all I care, and then vote. I'll even drive you to the polls.

College is about learning how yourself and others think, and I figured that out last Wednesday night. How can 20,000 people show more unity and pride than a high school of 200? Just keep telling yourself this: we are all in it together. We do everything as a family. It's an attitude and a mentality that works anywhere. When you're at a huge house party and the police show up, you're all in it together. When there's no power in the residence halls, you're all in it together. When it's six in the morning and Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco brings you doughnuts and you eat them even though your mouth is frozen shut, you are all in it together.

Spontaneity and randomness are the keys to life. Think of Forrest Gump and all the things he supposedly did and where he ended up at times. Give up control. Smile at everybody you pass on the way to class. Yes, it will freak them out, but it's fun. Mess with fraternity boys in line for Panda Express. Make them feel like jerks for not remembering making out with you last Saturday, even if you've never actually met.

Lie to people. Tell them you did a 60-second keg stand or that your uncle was in the original "Footloose" with Kevin Bacon.

Pretty soon, aspects of your life will spiral out of control, and life will be amazing.

The Campus Fourm is the Collegian's anonymous call-in system. The Fourm is edited to eliminate vulgar, racist, obscene and libelous comments. The comments are not the opinion of the Collegian nor are they endorsed by the editorial staff.

I'm going to the Chester to play racquetball.

To my future wife: please forgive me for what I just did.

So, according to the Collegian, we did not beat

Kansas last night because they said the streak is now at 25 games. I'm just confused. Does anybody edit this thing?

If I went to Barack'n'Roll, does that mean I rocked out with my caucus out?

If a tree falls in the woods, who cares? We beat KU.

It's colder than my bed on a Friday night.

Correct me if I'm wrong, but didn't we end the streak at 24 games, and not 25 like your paper told me? Wendy Haun, you're such a liar.

Well after we beat them at their house, the next stop is Africa.

Shalee Lehnig is the greatest player in the world. She could out-hustle a hamster in a wheel.

You gave me chlamydia.

To the girl in charge of bringing Will Ferrell to K-State: you are my hero.

To the guy singing as he walked behind the girl in the black coat: you really brightened my day. You can sing to me anytime.

Hey, Fourm: this one's in regards to Jason Whitlock's editorial in the Kansas City paper on Thursday. Apparently, K-State fans were dastardly at the game on Wednesday. Apparently, he's never been to a border war before.

Good thing I went to the game last night, or else the Collegian could've tricked me into thinking that KU was triumphant. Thanks, front-page story.

We're gonna go do work at the Chester.

Hey, Annette Lawless: I don't want to be your boyfriend, but what are you doing on Friday night?

Dalonte Hill, call SafeRide.

You can't spell Stuni without herpes.

So what happens when the Fourm calls the Fourm?

The Fourm's in my Top 5.

Hey Chi-Os, I thought your initiation was last weekend. Funny, we saw a bunch of you out.

It's been 24 years since we've beat KU and "finally" is the only word that you could think of for the front page of the Collegian? Bye.

Why don't you learn how to drive so I don't have to play stunt driver?

That was the best Fourm I've ever read. For once, thank you, Collegian.

To the guy in the quiet hallway with his phone on loud: shut up.

Screw the Giants and the Patriots. Go Broncos.

Get off Merriewether's back. He scored more than you ever will.

I heard the book of national secrets is at the Stuni.

I can tell you for a fact that yesterday was not the Stuni guy's birthday.

Is it bad that I want to burn every single one of my roommate's stuffed animals?

Michael Beasley, do you know how much we love you? It's a whole, whole lot.

When somebody saves your life in line for the KU game, you write them a thank you in the Fourm. So girl, next time I'll just have to trample you.

Hey, Childress: if somebody's family was making $1 million a year, they wouldn't need financial aid. Duh.

For the full Fourm, go to www.kstatecollegian.com.

RELAY | Involvement inspires mom

research for the American Cancer society for research and items like wigs for cancer patients, she said.

Norma Najera, Trini's mother, said she is inspired by her daughter and all the work she has done for Relay for Life at K-State.

Norma became involved with Relay for Life through her daughter and has helped the program expand in Santana, Kan. Norma said she helped with the first Relay for Life walk in her hometown the previous year.

Norma, who attended last year's Relay for Life at K-State, said she was in complete awe of the number of students who participated in the event.

"These kids were so committed and into it; it was so touching," Norma said. "I looked around at all the kids involved and get emotional just thinking about the kids who walked beside me and asked me about my story,"

RELAY FOR LIFE

Relay for Life will take place at 6 p.m. April 11 until 6 a.m. April 12 at Memorial Stadium.

How can students get involved? Students can start a team or join a team by going to: <http://events.cancer.org/rflksstateks> and selecting "start a team" or "join a team."

How many members per team? It does not matter how many individuals are on a team.

How much does a team have to donate? Team members set their own goals of how much money they would like to donate to Relay for Life.

Norma said.

Norma continues to be amazed at the commitment the students had to participate in the program. She said anyone who participates in Relay for Life will have an experience they will never forget.

"Her goal is awareness, and that is the only way we will find a cure and raise money," Norma said. "[Trini] believes in this so much that we might find a cure someday."

Jessica Leigh Smith, sophomore in elementary education, who also has been affected by cancer in her family, has channeled her experiences and put it to use as the public relations representative for Relay for Life.

She said her goal is to get the word out to people about how cancers start, the different types of cancers and how cancer can be prevented.

Smith participated in Relay for Life as a young girl and now works for Relay for Life to help raise awareness and money for cancer patients.

She said Relay for Life is an event people can participate in with their friends and family and is excited for this year's event because it is a carnival theme.

"This event every year is so much fun, and people should really get involved with it," Smith said.

GALA | Donors offer funds, time

The auction included an array of paintings and sculptures that were provided by commissioned artists. The Art of HeART Care, a piece depicting a single heart in a rainbow of color, was used as a central theme for the evening. A one-of-a-kind 14K gold pendant completed by a genuine 1K ruby created by Barbara Pujol was a key auction item.

Not only were monetary contributions made to the gala, but many individuals also donated time, facilities and décor. The Holiday Inn at the Campus allowed the use of two floors, as well as staff to cater and be host for the evening.

"It's special because everyone puts so much time into it," said Bridget McCombe, decorator with Noble Hospitality. "It's very important to make this a huge success for the hospital. Everyone has really taken part in it."

The décor alone took volunteers more than 12 hours to assemble and hang. Head of the decorations committee Caroline Jankovich was inspired by the red and black hues to create an Asian themed dining area where guests could enjoy a live performance by The Exceptions featuring Betti O.

"[The theme] sort of evolved," Jankovich said. "I wanted to use the colors red and black. I wanted something elegant and simple with fabulous floral. That really inspires you for a Zen, Asian feel."

The gala has proven to be a major asset in Mercy's goal for better cardiovascular care.

"The numbers are going up and up," McCombe said.

A group of ambitious women plan to continue the tradition of improved heart care for years to come.

"It's amazing because we have a committee of 32 women," Snyder said. "We all work really hard. Once [a] gala has ended, we start working on the next one. Next year is the fifth one, so it has to be bigger and better."

CARDS | Students aid young artists

Refreshments also were served.

Denise Heideman, junior in art education, is vice president of the Student Friends organization. She was helping direct kids at the workshop along with Jacob Perkinson, junior in painting and president of the Student Friends, and several other members.

"We walk around, play with them, and help them learn how to express themselves through art at a young age," Heideman said.

Perkinson said the group tries to have four workshops at the Beach Museum throughout the year. The $5 fee for one workshop allows them to buy supplies for the next craft workshop. He said they have an open house in the spring, one in the fall and a Christmas workshop in addition to the Valentine's Day workshop.

"A lot of groups have workshops, but we just hang out and have a good time," Perkinson said. "This is just a good excuse to make crafts."

He said the Beach Museum offers a membership called "Beach Buddies" for children ages 3 to 12. It costs $25 per year per child and offers discounts to the craft workshops, a free gift, admittance to exhibition receptions at the museum, a newsletter and mail on the member's birthday.

Heideman said she has been involved with Student Friends since she was a freshman. They now have about 10 to 15 members. She said it is a great way for art majors to get involved around campus.

"It's really fun and easy to do," Heideman said. "You just get to sit around a play with kids for two hours on a Sunday. There's no reason for me not to."

Streak ended

K-State receives 1st conference loss at Missouri

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Missouri sophomore guard J.T. Tiller scored a career-high 20 points, which led Missouri to a 77-74 victory over K-State in Columbia Saturday.

Freshman forward Michael Beasley finished with 17 points, his lowest total since the Dec. 31, 2007, loss against Xavier and the lowest total he has scored in conference play. Also leading the Wildcats in scoring were senior guard Blake Young, who had 14, and freshmen forwards Dominique Sutton and Bill Walker with 11. Beasley said the team's maturity level showed Saturday.

"We played like boys instead of men," Beasley said. "We thought they were going to lay down. This is a good team, and obviously, they didn't want to go down."

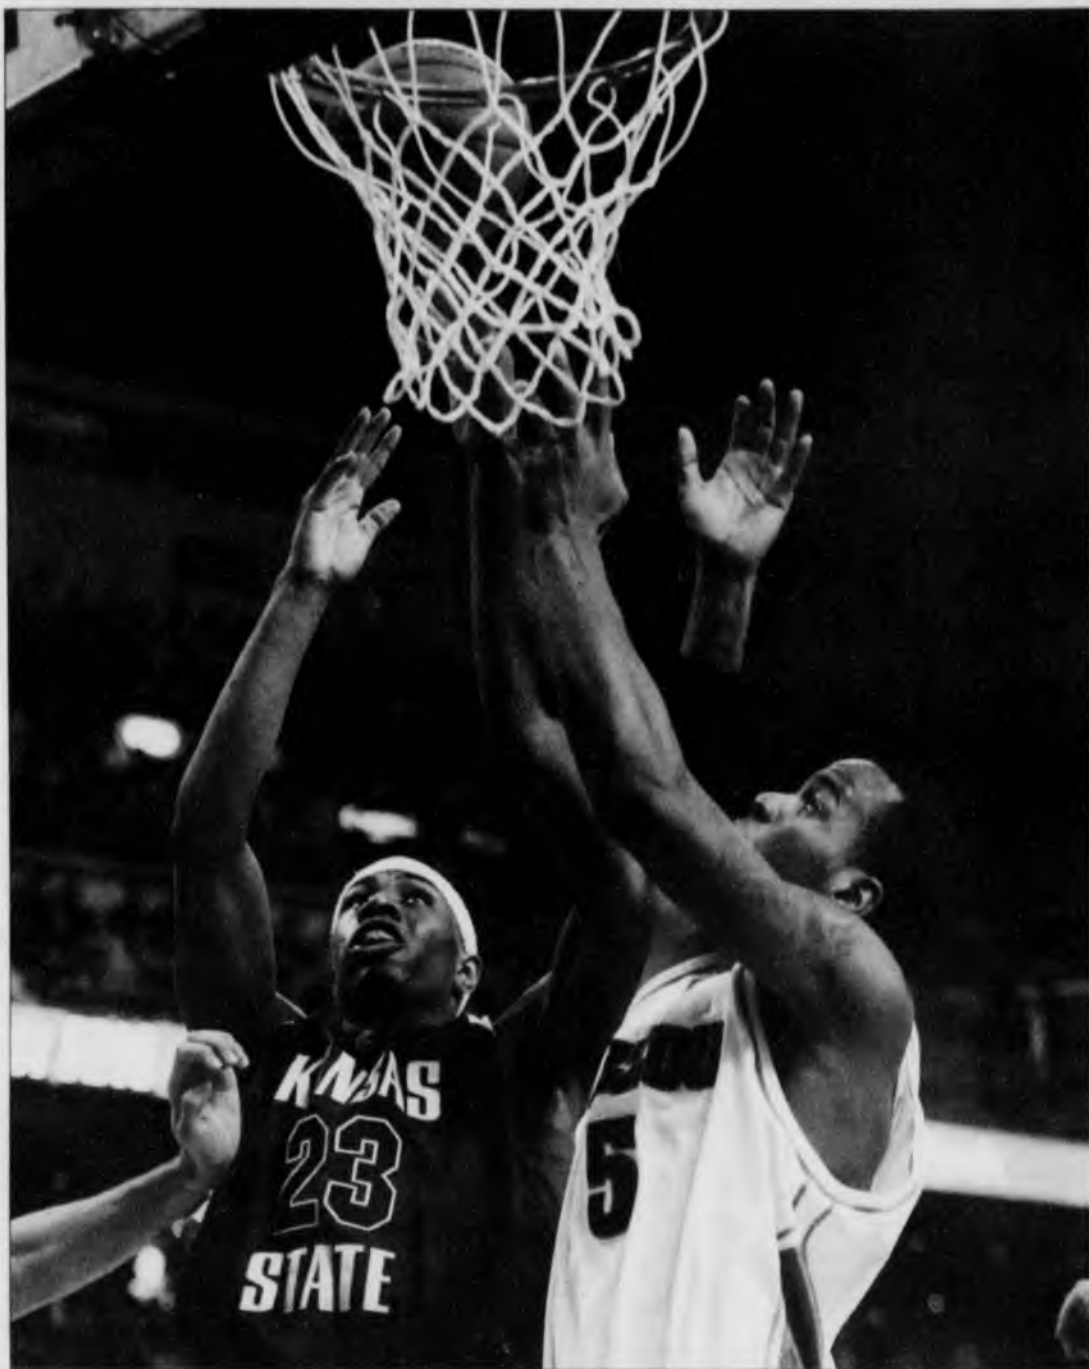

Missouri junior DeMarre Carroll said though it was a daunting task, he thought his team did a good job of containing Beasley.

"He's a strong player and he's very unstoppable," Carroll said. "We kept our traps at him and our double-teams, sometimes triple-teams, and that got him out of rhythm, which helped us in the long run."

K-State (15-5, 5-1 Big 12 Conference) led 44-34 at half, but was outscored 43-30 in the second half. K-State led by as much as 14 during the last 20 minutes, but a strong second half showing by Tiller, as well as junior guard Leo Lyons and sophomore guard Keon Lawrence, eventually whittled away K-State's lead. Missouri took the lead for the first time in the game on a layup by Tiller with 2:03 left in the game. The Tigers improved to 13-9 overall and 3-4 in the Big 12.

Three Tiger players did not play, with Lyons and senior guard Marshall Brown regaining eligibility Saturday. Still suspended were senior Darryl Butterfield and senior Jason Horton. It was announced Friday that Horton was arrested by the Columbia Police Department following the events of Jan. 21, when senior Steffon Hannah broke his jaw in an unknown event. Hannah will be out for at least five to six weeks, and then Missouri coach Mike Anderson said he would decide on his future at Missouri.

"Obviously, they've had a little adversity here the last couple of days," coach Frank Martin said.

Jonathan Knight | COLLEGIAN

K-State freshman forward Dominique Sutton and Missouri's Leo Lyons fight for a rebound late in the second half of Saturday's game in Columbia, Mo. Coming off its win against KU, the Wildcats let a 14-point, second-half lead slip away as they lost the game, 77-74.

"Mike [Anderson] has handled it like the stand-up guy that he is. He's kept those kids focused and ready to play. They came out and made shots and beat us."

Besides Tiller, scoring in double-figures for Missouri were Lyons, with 13 points, and Lawrence, who had 11. Missouri shot 64 percent from the floor in the second half, which made up for its paltry 35 percent shooting in the first half.

This will not be a team that accepts this kind of failure in the future, Martin said.

"You have to find a way to win," he said. "When you go on the road, it's not easy. If anybody was happy with this, I guarantee you, they wouldn't be on the team tomorrow."

Cats snag qualifying marks

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The track and field team left the Seivigne Husker Invitational with two NCAA provisional qualifiers and an event win.

Freshman Annika Schoenebeck finished fifth in the pentathlon on Friday and reached the NCAA provisional qualifying mark by totaling 3,731 points.

Coach Cliff Rovelto said Schoenebeck had a good meet, and he said he is impressed she has put up such high marks as a true freshman.

"I actually think she is going to be quite a bit better," Rovelto said. "She's doing a good job, and she's going to be valuable to us."

Senior Donniece Parrish met the NCAA provisional qualifying mark in the 400-meter dash when she finished third with a personal best time of 55.32 on Saturday. Her time is the fourth best in K-State indoor history, and it tops her previous best of 53.95.

Rovelto said Parrish ran well in the 400, though she has only ran a handful of them in her college career.

"In my opinion [the 400-meter dash] is her best race distance," Rovelto said. "I think she is definitely a 400-meter runner, and I think she is now just starting to embrace that."

Meeting the NCAA provisional mark does not guarantee the athletes will qualify for the NCAA championships, but Rovelto said Schoenebeck and Parrish have performed well enough to meet the NCAA automatic qualifying marks. If their provisional marks earn them a trip to the NCAA championships, they will join sophomore Loren Groves, who qualified in the weight throw, and junior Scott Sellers, who qualified in the high jump.

The only event win of the weekend came from junior Jason Collett. He won the 800-meter run with a time of 1:52.08.

The invitational provided the first opportunity of the season for the men to compete in the heptathlon. Junior Adam

Women's tennis captures 1st dual-match victory

Pauline Guemas, freshman, was defeated by Chelsea Jones, 6-0, 6-3 at the season opener dual match against Syracuse University Saturday night at Ahearn Field House.

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A late start did nothing to deter the Wildcats' tennis team as they captured their first dual-match victory Saturday over Syracuse, 5-2.

The match's start time was delayed several hours as a snowstorm in the east prevented Syracuse from making it to Manhattan in time for the 10 a.m. start. Instead, the match began at 4 p.m., and the Wildcats captured their fourth-straight season-opening win in convincing fashion.

"The delay didn't hurt us all," coach Steve Bietau said. "We got some hits in the morning and it wasn't an issue for us."

In doubles play, the Wildcats saw a new duo in the No. 3 spot dominate 8-2. Freshmen Antea Huljev and Vanessa Cottin teamed up for the first time and topped Ashley Spicer and Jacquelyn Tang. From the No.

1 spot, senior Olga Klimova and junior Katerina Kudlackova improved their mark to 2-2 on the year with a 8-1 win over Christina Tan and Simone Kalhorn. Senior Viviana Yrureta and sophomore Natasha Vieira were defeated in a close match, 8-5.

"I think this was one time where the scores were pretty indicative of how things went," Bietau said. "We were pretty clean and aggressive at the one and three spots, while we were pretty tight and ragged at the two spot."

Yrureta led the Wildcats in singles play from the No. 1 spot, with a 6-3, 6-4 victory. Cottin, Kudlackova and Vieira also were victorious from the No. 2, No. 3 and No. 5 spots, respectively. Huljev and freshman Pauline Guemas were defeated from the No. 4 and No. 6 spots.

"It was a place where we had some adjustments," Bietau said.

Wildcats suffer scoring drought, fall to No. 6 Baylor

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When a team falls into a scoring drought like K-State did Saturday against a team like No. 6 Baylor, it can often be hard to recover.

For 10 minutes in the second half, No. 18 K-State couldn't get a field-goal attempt to drop, and consequently, lost 63-49 at Bramlage Coliseum, ending the Wildcats' 10-game winning streak.

Down 36-29 to open the second half, the Wildcats (15-6, 7-1 Big 12 Conference) went on a 6-2 run, pulling within three points of the lead with a basket from junior guard Shalee Lehning with 18:27 to play in the game.

When the Wildcats made their next field goal with 7:44 to play, the score was 55-40 and Baylor (20-1, 8-0 Big 12) was already well in control of the game. The Bears extended their lead to as much as 20 points before the conclusion of the contest.

"I felt like this is just a game in which Baylor played well, and we really just played really poorly. Consequently, we were dominated in all phases of the game," K-State coach Deb Patterson said. "Baylor played well, and we were beaten soundly by a team that came into our arena and played good basketball."

K-State opened the game with back-to-back points from junior forward Marlies Gipson to take a 4-2 lead with 18:19 left in the first half. The Bears answered with a 15-4 run to open an 11-point 19-8 lead.

With 10:49 left in the half, Baylor junior guard Jhasmin Player made a transition layup to give the Bears a 21-12 lead, but came down awkwardly on her knee, forcing her to leave the game with assistance from trainers. Baylor coach Kim Mulkey said the team would have to wait for an MRI to find the extent of the injury.

The Wildcats pulled close to the Bears in the final five minutes of the half with a 10-2 run to cut the Baylor advantage to 34-29. Sophomore Danielle Wilson made a shot with one second left to give the Bears a seven-point halftime lead.

Gipson led K-State in the first half with 14 points and seemingly kept them in the game. Baylor held Gipson scoreless in the second half despite not making any changes in the way she was being defended.

"Give her credit, in the first half she made some unbelievable shots," Mulkey said. "I don't know that we changed anything; we just kept doing what we were doing and she missed shots in the second half."

The Bears dominated the rebounding battle throughout the game finishing with a 42-29 advantage. Despite an overall advantage in size for Baylor, Patterson attributed the loss to other factors.

"I don't really think those elements are significant as just competing. For whatever reason, we were just very, very flat," she said. "They're on the road, it's in a tough environment, they didn't blink an eye, and they played well."

For Lehning, the game was a result of not doing what has made them so successful over the past couple of weeks — playing as a team.

"I think more of our issue tonight was the unit that we have been taking pride in, that we have become, and our five players weren't that tonight," Lehning said. "I will take the blame as the point guard, and this will be something we can learn from."

Senior guard Kimberly Dietz scored 13 points for K-State and finished 3-for-6 from three-point range, an area her team did poorly in comparison to previous weeks, shooting just 5-of-20 from three point range.

The Wildcats will have a week off before picking up action against Kansas at 1 p.m. Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

Junior forward Marlies Gipson executes a jump shot over Baylor's forward Rachel Allison Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum. Baylor handed K-State its first conference loss this season, dominating K-State 63-49.

Yoga-licious

Stretches relieve stress, increase flexibility

Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The tree, warrior and cat-cow poses might sound bizarre to the general public. But to those who practice yoga, they are just a few ways to become stronger and more flexible.

Ana Franklin, founder and instructor of Yoga Connection in Manhattan, said yoga is used to manage stress, clear the mind, promote flexibility and strength and enhance physical wellness and comfort. "The human body is not made to be a couch potato," Franklin said. "By moving the body in unaccustomed positions, you are encouraging the natural flow of the body to keep itself healthy. That's why yoga works."

Franklin said the breathing techniques and movement in yoga enhance the body's circulation. This, in turn, improves the immune and digestive systems.

"When we take the time to relieve some stress, our bodies respond in a good way," she said.

Erin Dawson, assistant director of fitness at Peters Recreation Complex, said yoga has more relaxation and flexibility benefits than other forms of exercise. It also helps improve posture.

"It's very much a mind-body workout," she said.

Dawson said some of the more popular poses are the downward dog, the chair, warrior II, the triangle, child's pose and the cat-cow. She said these poses help in the following ways:

- The Downward Dog (or Dog Stretch):

This pose strengthens the upper body. It also stretches the shoulders, hamstrings, upper and middle back and calves.

- The Chair: This is a balance pose that helps strengthen the quadriceps, glutes, back, shoulders, feet and ankles.

- Warrior II: The chest and abductors are stretched in this pose. It also strengthens the quadriceps and glutes.

- The Triangle: One of Dawson's favorite poses, this one strengthens the torso and legs. It especially stretches the waist and hamstrings.

- Child's Pose: This pose stretches the back and shoulders.

- The Cat-Cow: The core stabilizers — neck and shoulders — are strengthened and stretched in this pose.

Yoga is offered at different times during the week from Sunday through Thursday at the rec.

Kristin Kay, senior in psychology, said she has taken yoga classes at the rec in the past. She said she learned how to put together poses in sequences. Now she said she can create her own sequences and do yoga at home.

Kay said her favorite poses deal with balance, like the tree pose. She said the mind must be clear and aligned with the body to fully do a balancing pose.

"All poses integrate the mind, but there are some that do more," she said. "Yoga in general works all parts of the body."

Kay said she started doing yoga when she was recovering from an eating disorder.

She said doing this type of exercise has made her feel better about herself.

"When I'm doing yoga, I feel comfortable with my body and with the way that I am," Kay said.

Though yoga is a strengthening exercise, Kay said she doesn't feel tired after doing it, compared to how she feels after a cardio workout.

"It's the only exercise I do that [makes me] feel clarity when I'm done," she said. "I feel energized after I do yoga."

SEX AND THE CITY: THE LITTLE APPLE

Pleasures of anal sex outweigh potential health risk

This just in: anal sex is no longer just for us gay people.

As more individuals realize that I work as a sexual-health educator, I realize a growing trend of heterosexual men asking me the same question — "Matt, how can I get my girlfriend to try anal?" That is right, ladies — your men are curious about the exotic destinations you offer.

MATT COMBES

Usually, when approached, I refrain from laughing out loud and quickly tell the gentlemen to try praying and perhaps jewelry. But this begs the question of what the allure of anal sex is and how it differs from the more traditional vaginal entry.

The most recent U.S. data from a national representative sample comes from the 2002 National Survey of Family Growth, which was conducted on more than 12,000 men and women ages 15 to 44. Results showed that 34 percent of men and 30 percent of women reported engaging in anal sex at least once, said Cory Silverberg, a certified sex educator on About.com.

Since the advent of safer-sex education pamphlets, the level of risk anal sex brings about has changed with every new printing. But, the gist is anal sex has more inherent risk than vaginal or oral sex, even if you do use a barrier.

Why is this so? Because of tighter, wetter, thinner and non-lubricated tissues, there is more risk of tearing, and, in turn, more risk of a sexually transmitted infection. In addition, the rectum brings in a slew of nasty issues that aren't as prevalent in other situations including Hepatitis A, E. coli and many other little bacterial and microbial stinkers.

So why go for it? If done properly, anal sex can raise stimulation to a brand-new level. It's tighter, more sensual, and let's be honest — it makes you feel kind of nasty and naughty.

Always make sure you are ready both physically and mentally for sexual activity.

Also, always use protection. You want to avoid sheer/ultra sensitive condoms; you will get enough sensation with a regular condom and a slight percentage of better protection. Also, avoid condoms with spermicidal lube; you won't get pregnant through this hole, and the nonoxynol-9 can cause sloughing of tissues and cause higher risk of STI transmission. Take your time. It is going to hurt at first, but with patience and some foreplay, it is all go.

Finally, buy a large stock in a lube company because you are going to be using a lot. I suggest brands with numbing agents to help your partner along.

So, anal sex is in. Why be left out?

TRACK | Relay teams place at Neb.

Fretwell placed third and finished with 5,275 points, which was only 25 points short of the NCAA provisional qualifying standard. Freshman Moritz Cleve finished eighth in the event, and placed first out of the heptathletes in the 1000-meter run.

Junior Emily Dittmore

posted a second place finish in the 1000-meter run, finishing at 3:01.71.

The Wildcats also finished second in the women's 4x400-meter relay. Parrish, freshman TiAra Walpool, senior Marnyka Honeycutt, and senior Morgan Bonds posted a time of 3:45.87 in the event.

In the men's 1600-meter run, the Wildcats took second and third place. Freshman Mike Sickafoose finished at 4:16.42, just ahead of sophomore Danny Schneider, who posted a time of 4:16.27.

The women were able to take first, second, third and fifth place in the consolation heat of the 200-meter dash.

The Wildcats will compete in the Don Barrett Air Force Open this Saturday.

Equestrian team drops 1st show of season

By Jonathan Wright
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Equestrian team had high expectations Saturday going into Oklahoma State. The goals weren't quite met as the team fell to the Cowgirls 17-5 in their first show of 2008.

The Wildcats' overall record dropped to 4-3, while Oklahoma State remained undefeated at 7-0.

"Today went pretty well I thought, but we obviously would have loved to come home with a win," said English head coach Ashley Foster. "We had some great rides, and we now know what we need to work on to move forward."

OSU held a 4-2 advantage in equitation over fences.

The Wildcats then fell to the Cowgirls 4-1-1 in horsemanship and equitation on the flat. OSU finished the show with a 5-1 win in reigning.

"This was a tough day for us, but I am happy with how we rode," said Western head coach Casie Williamson. "We just have a few things to work on and we believe we will still have a positive semester."

TENNIS | Freshman wins singles

"Katka [Kudlackova] and Vanessa [Cottin] were able to make the proper adjustments after some early trouble. It's a question of making sure that everyone has a clear plan when they begin a match."

One of the biggest improvements in the matches was Cottin's play. The freshman from Ouainville, France, who joined the team early in January, was a bright spot for K-State. She came back after a first set loss to take a singles match victory over Kalhorn.

"Vanessa was impressive," Bietau said. "It's still the first match but she competed well, and I was pleased with her play."

Bietau also said that the matches were illuminating to underlying issues still persistent in the team's play.

"It definitely makes things clearer from practice this week," he said. "There were matches where we should make improvements, and we had some struggles that won't occur after another week of work. I was pretty happy with how we played."

The Wildcats will have a week to work before returning to action at noon Saturday at Ahearn Field House against St. Louis, prepared for what lies ahead.

Online system phase-in to begin

By Amanda Keim
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

On Feb. 15, DARS, used by students to track their progress in completing their specific degrees, will shut down for approximately one week.

The signs of change already can be seen on the KATS welcome page. In red letters just below the "Enter KATS" button are the words "Coming soon: iSIS, the new student system to replace KATS."

Closing DARS, which stands for Degree Audit Reporting System, is just another step toward a new and improved Internet system for K-State.

"One of the key messages that students might be interested in knowing is that we will be shutting down the DARS system beginning at 5 p.m. on Feb. 15, and we're having to reconfigure that system to work with the new system instead of working with KATS," said Jennifer Gehrt, K-State's Legacy Application Systems Empowered Replacement Project director.

By Feb. 22, Gehrt said all administrators will be able to begin utilizing DARS through iSIS and no longer will have access to it through KATS.

Students planning to meet with their advisers this week will need to prepare themselves accordingly by printing a DARS report at some point in the week prior to the planned shutdown.

Students will begin seeing a new Web page when accessing KATS beginning Feb. 11. The page will have several different items that, when clicked on, will direct students to the correct system for the action they wish to complete.

"The other thing that's going to happen within the next couple of weeks is that when students log onto KATS, they'll be getting a buffer page so that they know which system to do what in," Gehrt said.

iSIS will be phased in fully by fall 2008, at which point KATS will be removed completely.

Training sessions are being offered to advisers who wish to learn more about the program and will continue until Feb. 29. The sessions work with faculty to define new terminology and features provided by iSIS.

"So far, I think [iSIS] will be okay," said Jessica Bigger, Department of Journalism and Mass Communications adviser. "It will take a while to learn, because we're so used to using the other systems right now. There will definitely be a learning curve."

Though many alterations are coming to KATS, Gehrt said students still will be able to use their eID and password for iSIS.

"We're phasing the system in, and everything will be functioning by the time the fall '08 semester begins," she said.

ISIS IMPORTANT DATES

Feb. 11 - Students will begin seeing a new Web page when accessing KATS

Feb. 15 - at 5 p.m. DARS will be down for a week

Feb. 22 - All administrators will be able to begin utilizing DARS through iSIS.

Riley County political parties to have caucuses for election

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas' Democratic and Republican 2008 presidential caucuses take place four days apart, and they will help decide the state's allocation of delegates in the first presidential election without incumbents in the primaries since 1928.

Kansas Democrats will have their statewide caucus at 6 p.m. Today, also known as Super Tuesday, in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

Kansas Republicans' caucus will take place at 10 a.m. Saturday at Pottroff Hall in CiCo Park. Manhattan is the headquarters for the 22nd State Senate District caucuses.

Kansas lawmakers decided in April 2007 to forgo a primary and save an estimated $2 million. The last time the state legislature funded a primary was in 1992.

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS

Parking-garage construction south of the Union leaves few close parking options for the Riley County Democratic Caucus. Alternative parking arrangements, shuttle services and carpooling will take place because of the construction, said Steve Smethers, vice chairman of the Riley County Democratic Party and K-State associate professor of journalism and mass communications.

Smethers said Riley County Democratic Party members told the Kansas Democratic Party about potential parking problems, and its members did a search of alternative locations. However, most facilities in Manhattan that could have the caucus did not want to open themselves to a political party, Smethers said.

Shuttle vans will run from 5 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. every 10 minutes from the parking lot west of Peters Recreation Complex to the Union. The shuttle service also will operate at the caucus's conclusion at about 8:30 p.m. A block of parking spaces also will be reserved in the parking lot across the street from Old Memorial Stadium on Denison Avenue directly north of St. Isadore's Catholic Church.

Riley County Democratic Party members also will operate a carpool and provide home pickups. Volunteers will pick up voters and take them to the Union between 4 p.m. and 5 p.m. Those needing home pickup service should call 785-770-3987 by noon today with their name, address and telephone number.

Smethers said it is difficult to estimate how many will participate in today's caucus, but he said he anticipates a "good crowd of people." Kansas Democrats traditionally have caucused on Saturdays, but state party officials decided to switch to Tuesday because of excitement and participation with Super Tuesday.

Gov. Sebelius urges students to caucus

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius made K-State the first stop Monday morning on her Interstate 70 college tour promoting political interest among students.

She addressed students in the K-State Student Union Courtyard, where she urged them to caucus with more than 20 other states for presidential candidate Barack Obama on this Super Tuesday.

She began her speech by praising the K-State men's basketball team's victory against the University of Kansas Thursday night at Bramlage.

"By the way, congratulations on making history the other night - nice game here on the campus," Sebelius said. "But you have a better chance to make history tomorrow."

Sebelius said in this upcoming election, new voters - including young voters - are taking more interest, indicated by record turnouts for the last four caucuses. She said too many young people were not interested in politics, and they currently have the lowest voter

WHAT IS A CAUCUS?

Caucus: A meeting of the local members of a political party, especially to select delegates to a convention or register preferences for candidates running for office.

- dictionary.com

Republicans vote by writing their candidate's name on a blank sheet of paper, or sometimes by a show of hands. Shorthand or nicknames - "Huck" for former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee, or "Rudy" for former New York City Mayor Rudolph W. Giuliani - will be counted.

Democrats break into groups based on their preferences. If a candidate fails to reach the "viability" threshold - at least 15 percent of the vote - he or she is eliminated. Supporters of eliminated candidates can fall in with another candidate or leave. The voting is done in the open, and debate and persuasion are part of the process.

Two windows broke during the incident, totaling $500 in damage, according to RCPD reports.

Residents participate in local library's "Guitar Hero" competition

By Whitney Noe
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan Public Library was host to a "Guitar Hero" tournament Monday evening for residents of the Manhattan community.

The event started at 4 p.m. for ages 14-17, and continued for two hours before the adults, ages 17 and older, played from 7 to 9 p.m. Snacks were provided for those in attendance, and prizes were awarded to the winners. Only 32 contestants could participate in each tournament, but the energetic crowd numbered more than 32.

"We have a great turnout here today," said Janene Hill, young-adult library organizer. "Many kids brought their parents, brothers and sisters and friends — more than what I expected."

This is the first time the Manhattan Public Library has organized a game tournament for members of the community, but it is not the first time Guitar Hero has been the source of entertainment at numerous libraries.

"Guitar Hero" is one of the most popular games for the libraries right now, so we are definitely not the first to do this," said Royce Kitts, reference librarian. "We started out with just adults, but enough kids saw the logos and wanted to play, so we decided to change the age group to allow them to compete."

Three different areas for the children and adults to play were set up in the library's auditorium; two screens projected the actual tournament play, while the other was set up for children awaiting their turn.

To accommodate for the tournament, the public library asked many businesses to help sponsor the occasion. CD TradePost donated a "Guitar Hero II" game along with a Play Station 2; Texas Star donated chips and salsa; Auntie Mae's Parlor gave gift certificates for the adult crowd; On the Wild Side sent posters and journals; The Guitar Hero Company donated T-shirts, buttons, signs, as well as a Nintendo Wii and a "Guitar Hero III" game; and the Manhattan Library Association helped the library buy a Wii.

Kitts said the goal of the tournament was to help promote the library and show it as a fun setting to those who are unfamiliar with the library or have never been there at all.

"It is a good way to get new kids involved with the library, and I think they are really enjoying themselves," Kitts said.

Kyle Stroble, a 16-year-old "Guitar Hero" player, said this was not the first time he had been in the library, but it was his first "Guitar Hero" tournament.

"I've been here before but for nothing like this," he said.

Organizers said they plan to keep the new tradition of game tournaments in Manhattan. They will present "Dance Dance Revolution" and "Wii Bowling" competitions sometime in the near future.

"This is a place where I hang out after school," said Brian Scheideman, 14. "I can't count how many times I've played this game, but today the cookies are good, and 'Guitar Hero' is awesome."

Possible economic recession could relieve stress of college loans

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The possibility of an economic recession could prove helpful to college students with loans.

"It's always good when the rates go down," said Randy Stitt, vice president of Community First National Bank.

The Federal Reserve cut base interest rates again on Wednesday by another quarter of a percent. This means student loan interest rates drop, which saves college students money on the accumulating interest, he said.

"In my opinion, we are doing too much to compensate for the market," said Dan Kuester, assistant professor of economics. "We are definitely in an economic slow down, but I don't know for certain we will meet the definition of a recession."

A recession is defined as six or more consecutive months of negatively growing Gross Domestic Product, which means the economy grows at a slower-than-normal rate. The Bureau of Economic Analysis reported the GDP increased 0.6 percent in 2007. Kuester said four factors influence the possibility of a recession — a decline in the housing market, rising unemployment rates, rising inflation and negative consumer attitude.

"The problem's with the housing market, and I don't want to minimize that effect," Kuester said.

The people failing to pay off their mortgages right now are borrowers with sub-prime mortgages, Stitt said. Sub-prime lenders loan money to people with poor credit or spend more than 40 percent of their income to pay debts like mortgage, car and credit-card payments. Sub-prime means the borrowers do not qualify for the best, or prime, interest rates from banks, he said.

"The 10-year bond is what the mortgage rates are based upon," Stitt said. "The stock market could do worse during a recession. People take their money out of the stock market and buy bonds. [A recession] helps lower rates and makes mortgages more affordable."

President George W. Bush said during his State of the Union address that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac need reformation to prevent this kind of housing crisis from happening again. Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac are the two government programs that provide money to loan institutions to make sub-prime loans available to borrowers who otherwise could not afford one, he said.

"It is a responsibility of people, lenders and consumers, to manage their loans [not the government]," Stitt said.

The second factor is the unemployment rate. The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported unemployment rate for December 2007 at 5 percent. The Bureau also states that Kansas has the 18th lowest unemployment rate in the country at 4.4 percent.

Third, higher energy prices stimulate a recession. Kuester said the federal government likes inflation to stay around 2 percent. The annual inflation rate for 2007 was at 5.6 percent, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"Wages are up, but so are prices for food and gas," Bush said during his address.

Kuester said when people talk about the possibility of a recession, it creates a self-fulfilling prophecy.

Bush addressed public opinion when he said he wanted an economic stimulus package passed by Congress to put more money in the hands of the consumers to keep people spending money. He said individuals and families needed tax relief, businesses needed investment incentives and Congress needed to cut $18 billion in federal spending on bloated or wasteful programs.

Day of days

Super Tuesday events mark halfway point of exciting election

I think it would be appropriate today, on so-called Super Tuesday, to pause for a moment and think back over all the barnstorming, fund-raising, straight-talking, bickering, crying, debating, horse-trading and good old-fashioned political fun we've had these past nine months. It's more than a little sad to think we're almost halfway done with the 2008 election, isn't it?

JOE VOSSEN

If you didn't enjoy yourself at all, don't worry. Today might signal the end of step one. If a candidate on either side emerges with a clear victory, it will be the beginning of a bigger, meaner, faster, more expensive general election campaign.

Today, more than 20 states will hold primaries or caucuses as the presidential candidates engage in their biggest day of voting yet in this extended primary campaign. People will go to the polls, and maybe at the end of the day, we will glimpse the eventual Republican and Democratic nominees for president.

Super Tuesday is big – think Super Bowl, Final Four, last episode of "American Idol" big. This is an opportunity for someone to win huge and everyone else to go home empty handed. The Washington Post reported on Jan. 15 that 52 percent of the total Democratic delegates are up for grabs today. On the Republican side, 41 percent of the total available delegates are at stake.

If one candidate emerged on both sides, it might be nice to have some closure. We could stop, take a breath, gather our collective wits as a nation and prepare for the battle – sorry, I meant general election – to come.

A break would be welcome. This exhausting primary campaign will be remembered for its unpredictability. Just when the pundits were ready to hand the victories (and party nominations) to Mitt Romney and Hillary Clinton in Iowa, voters put the political world on its head. When it seemed Huckabee-fever and Obamania would sweep through New Hampshire, voters showed they were not ready for these races to be over. It has been one month since the Iowa caucuses, and the contests on both sides are still a dead heat, too close to call.

However, I hope the ratings are still close at the end of the day. I hope no candidate runs away with a clear victory. I hope Super Tuesday fails to produce clear nominees for either party. I hope things become even more exhausting.

Predictable politics are uninteresting. They're stagnant. They certainly don't help improve low-voter-turnout rates. Watching politics like that is about as exciting as the NCAA Basketball Tournament probably was in the 1960s and 1970s.

was a foregone conclusion coach John Wooden and UCLA would cut down the nets at another national championship. Races can get a little boring when everyone knows who the winner will be.

Close races generate interest. They make candidates more accountable. Close races not only are good for our democratic process, they are immensely entertaining. Politics can be enjoyable. We want to feel like our participation really matters.

So, forgive me when I say this: I hope campaigns gear up, more fundraising records are broken and people now, more than ever, get involved. This primary race – the first without an incumbent president or vice-president since 1928 – has raised public interest in politics. People are sitting up, they are taking notice and listening to (not just watching) the debates. They know our country is at a crucial moment and that electing a leader who can restore our confidence in our country and our reputation abroad is of the utmost importance.

I say bring it on. May this Super Tuesday bring us one step closer, – but not finish off – one of the most important primary election seasons in our history.

Candidates should avoid mud-slinging, act mature

The primaries are entering their second month and already the mud is sling-ing harder than ever. It's Clinton vs. Obama, McCain vs. Romney and all the nobodies fighting for scraps.

GRADY BOLDING

Now that the fate of all the candidates is being decided within the primaries, it will be typical for surviving candidates to unleash smear tactics. Unfortunately, two popular candidates with the Republican Party managed to pull my strings last week. In the closing days of the Florida primaries, Republicans Sen. John McCain, of Arizona, and former Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney were at each other's throats for the Sunshine State. However, in a desperate attempt to win just a few more votes, both sought their trump cards when it came to political smearing.

On Jan. 28, The Associated Press reported Romney dubbed McCain's policies on energy, immigration and campaign finance reform liberal.

In response, McCain responded to a group of reporters in Jacksonville, "As the liberal governor of Massachusetts, he raised taxes by $750 million."

Way to be patriots, guys. I'm not sure when "liberal" and "conservative" became bad words in this country. But I know when it exploded not too long ago, and now both wings tend to use those words when defaming political opponents. I'm sick of it.

Just to balance out the issue, let's look to the Left. There's our girl, Hillary Clinton, New York senator and presidential hopeful for the Democratic Party. If there's one thing about Clinton I've noticed, she's not subtle with her opinions of the Republican Party. On the contrary, I'm sure we all remember the Monica Lewinsky scandal. In defense of her husband, Clinton mentioned to Matt Lauer on the Today Show on Jan. 27, 1998, her concerns with the "vast right-wing conspiracy" against her husband. Now you'd think she was finished there, so many years ago when her husband left office.

Think again. "For 15 years I have stood up against the right-wing machine, and I've come out stronger," Clinton said at a Democratic debate in 2007. "So if you want a winner who knows how to take them on, I'm your girl."

So if I am correct, when looking at their track records, McCain, Romney and Clinton have proven to us through their smears and their partisan claims that they are willing to single out half the country once they are in office.

What's there to say? Like any other American, I'm fed up with those two words, "liberal" and "conservative." It's one move for a blogger or even a political pundit to use the words in jest. But when presidential candidates pull such moves in a time during which politics is more polarized than ever, red flags need to go up.

Honestly, the candidates simply need to leave the "liberal" and "right-wing machine" smears to FOX News and MSNBC. Bottom line: America needs not only a responsible leader in the White House who will be a good leader to all Americans, but also an adult.

TO THE POINT

Students should be supportive of new K-State Web system

The world around us is constantly moving forward through technological advancements, and K-State's web systems are finally jumping on the bandwagon.

Starting this month,

K-State will begin phasing in the new iSIS program to replace KATS and the infamous DARS reports. This is a welcome sign of change, one that will most likely relieve student stress when trying to narrow down class lists for enrollment and the number of credits needed for graduation.

Not only are DARS reports confusing and difficult to read, but they are often unreliable and overloaded with unnecessary information. Hopefully the replacement system will restore our faith in automated assistance when trying to map out a graduation plan.

However, there will still be issues during the buffer period, until the new system is integrated by next fall. Connecting pages will direct students to the locations they're seeking, and students are urged to print off a DARS report sometime in the week prior to the shutdown later this month.

Despite this, it is refreshing to see that our university recognizes the need to move ahead with its on-line systems and truly strives to be one of the nation's top land-grant universities.

Though there will be possible frustrations over the next few months as the systems make the switch to a completely updated system, students should remember that K-State has only our best interests in mind, and it is important for us to remain patient and understanding when dealing with on-line setbacks.

Comedians present awards, perform popular hip-hop

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

Bramlage Coliseum was filled to the brim with more than 7,000 students, faculty and Manhattan residents waiting to see the first show on Will Ferrell's "Funny or Die Comedy Tour," presented by "Semi-Pro."

Before any of the comedians made it to the stage, various messages and jokes were flashed on the screens around the coliseum like "Boners are funny and cool!" and "Robbing someone over the age of 85 is not against the law."

The show began when Ferrell walked onto the stage in a KU sweatshirt. The crowd "booed" at the crimson-and-blue sweatshirt, but jeers quickly turned to cheers when he ripped the sweatshirt off to reveal a purple K-State sweatshirt.

After the cheers died down, the theme from "Mortal Kombat" played as Ferrell danced around, fighting ninjas.

Galifianakis, the first comedian to perform, gave the crowd his trademark one-liners for about 20 minutes. His jokes touched on everything from Disney shows to his favorite college memories.

"Actually, the only thing I remember from college is how many times my grandma died," Galifianakis said.

To end his set, Galifianakis said he wanted to "give a political message of hope," as he began taking off his coat and pants. Underneath was an orphan-Annie-style dress, and he lip-synced the classic song "Tomorrow" from the musical "Annie."

To help guide the audience, Galifianakis had all his messages written on a large, white pad. As he tore the pages down, various "messages of hope" were revealed. "Hire a Mexican to protest the war for you," was the sign that received the biggest response from the audience.

Demetri Martin, who appeared next, also brought his own style of music-comedy. Martin walked out on stage playing guitar and was accompanied by a short slide show.

Martin's jokes followed a college theme, and he showed various flyers he said he posts around the college campuses on which he performs. One flyer brandished a picture of an eye and said "I'm watching you. Call this number or I'll get you."

Ron Burgundy, a character from Ferrell's movie "Anchorman," proceeded to make an appearance on stage after Martin.

After saluting the troops from Fort Riley, Burgundy pointed to his crotch and referred to it the "original" Big Red One.

During Burgundy's sketch, Ron Prince came out for an exclusive interview. He asked numerous questions, including asking if Prince had ever used steroids to get pumped up for a big game. After replying "no," Prince gave the same answer when Burgundy asked if Prince had ever bitten one of his players.

Also while he was in character as Ron Burgundy, Ferrell interviewed football coach Ron Prince. Ferrell asked several questions about Prince's coaching experiences.

"Not even a little bit?" Burgundy asked. "Not enough to break the skin, just a nip?"

Before introducing Nick Swardson, Burgundy presented Amanda Stanford, senior in psychology; Courtney Hauser, senior in mass communications; and Ben Hopper, program adviser for the K-State Student Union, with the hammerhead shark trophy signed by Buzz Aldrin. K-State students won the trophy because they had the most students sign up for the "Funny or Die" application on Facebook.

Swardson, the last comic of the evening, condoned blacking out after drinking, sympathized with figure skaters and shared his desire to send all people older than 80 to "old island."

"I love drinking a lot when I have no idea what happened the next day," Swardson said.

When Swardson was done, Ferrell appeared on stage to wrap up the show and was joined by a large cardboard rainbow. Ferrell was dressed in "movement" pants, Uggs boots and a large red cotton shirt. After telling a few jokes, the three comedians joined Ferrell for a group performance of Alicia Keyes' hit song "No One."

The majority of the actual stand-up was performed by Swardson, Martin and Galifianakis with Ferrell doing skits between sets. Many people in the crowd, including Courtney Schwemmer, freshman in open option, said they enjoyed the show but would have liked seeing more comedy from Ferrell.

"I would have liked to have seen more Will," Schwemmer said.

Ferrell addresses how new movie's title, character part originated

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGE

To promote his new movie "Semi-Pro" and Web site funnyordie.com, Will Ferrell is making appearances on seven college campuses. The tour kicked off last night in Manhattan and will make stops at schools like the University of North Carolina and Ohio State University.

"Semi-Pro," a movie about a pop star turned basketball-team owner and player, was only one of the topics Ferrell addressed when he answered questions Monday afternoon.

Q: Where did you come up with the title "Semi-Pro?"

A: Well, even though the ABA (American Basketball Association) players were fully paid, salaried guys, for the most part, a lot of these guys had to work other jobs in the off season. It was a professional league, but it had a semi-professional feel to it.

Q: Do you have plans to do any other sports movies?

A: No. This just lined up this way that I ended up doing these three sports movies. "Blades of Glory" happened because Ben Stiller was going to do it, but then asked me to do it. We'd talked about "Semi-Pro" before "Blades of Glory" even happened. So, no, I don't have any plans. Unless someone could write a really good part for me to play a jockey. A troubled jockey.

Q: Did you guys get into any pick-up games on set?

A: Yeah, all the time. It was kind of a problem because you're working with a packed arena of extras, 10 different guys on the court, and you have these choreographed plays that we would run to make it look like free play. So any time it was cut, or they had to move the camera to do another set up, we all started playing. They literally had to take the balls away from us. When you're in a gym, all you want to do is just shoot baskets.

Q: Who is the best player on the cast?

A: Woody was very good at the half court, back to the basket, throw it over his head. He actually made a couple of those. There were a bunch of good players on those other teams. Every player that played was either currently playing in Europe or played in college. These guys would turn it on, and you forgot that these guys had a whole other gear, and you started to get cocky thinking you could play with these guys, then they would blow by you. Even that was kind of fun.

Q: How did K-State get on your list for the tour?

A: We knew we wanted to bring this tour to a part of the country that maybe wouldn't get a chance to see something like this and Kansas State just totally fit the bill. Some of our promoters were like "No, it's a great place to go. Take something like this and people will really respond." It's fun to get to do this kind of thing, for myself and the other comedians and know that this crowd is going to be so fired up to see something like this.

During Will Ferrell's performance, K-State students asked him different questions. There are three other comedians who are part of the "Funny or Die Comedy Tour."

Matt Castro COLLEGE

Q: How was it decided to promote the movie with this tour?

A: Some of my agents, who represent a lot of the stand ups, came up with the idea. I think it's how that happened. It was just a different way to get the word out about the Web site and movie and just do something a little more interactive with the live audience. This is kind of something that gets attention, but it's also fun for us to do. That was kind of the idea.

Proper stretching should involve ache-free, timed extensions

The last piece of advice a busy college student wants to hear is that we need to drop everything and exercise. We also know that just lifting heavy things or running until we're tired isn't enough; we have to do all these things correctly for them to actually benefit us. Stretching is no different.

KENDALL HALL

Quite a few students who actually make it to the gym forgo stretching completely, but you sell yourself short from some of the most desirable exercise benefits. Stretching, according to the American Council on Exercise, allows for greater freedom of movement, improved posture, increases physical and mental relaxation, releases muscle tension and soreness and also reduces risk of injury.

Just like with weight training, there are right and wrong ways to stretch. The latest research is reporting that stretching before warming up does not prevent injury and instead can cause it. Additional research suggests stretching before participating in certain sports can hinder your performance.

So, before stretching, take a few minutes to warm up. This can be something with low intensity, like walking or using an elliptical for 10 minutes. Warming up also allows your body to increase performance levels during physical activity.

When stretching, many people "bounce" their limbs, but most fitness professionals now consider this practice extremely harmful. You increase your risk for injury this way, by forcing your muscles to stretch further than they might be willing to go by using gravity. Holding a stretch is much more effective.

How long do you hold a stretch? A study from the British Medical Journal said that five seconds is better than nothing, but 15 seconds is better than five. The longer you hold a stretch, the greater range of motion improvements you will see. So, if you finish your workout 20 minutes before your next class starts, and it takes you 15 minutes to find a parking spot, doing the minimum amount of stretching is still good, and maybe next time you can linger in your stretches a bit longer.

Another common mistake people make is holding their breath while stretching. If you have ever taken a yoga class, had a personal trainer or taken a group fitness class, you have heard about the importance of breathing. Not only does it keep you from passing out, it allows oxygen to reach your working muscles. Yoga instructors will tell you that you can go deeper into your stretches on the exhalation of your breath.

One last thing to consider while you stretch is that the phrase, "no pain, no gain" is an outdated way of thinking when it comes to exercise, especially stretching. If you are stretching and you feel intense pulling or pain, stop or don't push yourself so far. Flexibility training is a gradual process, the same way building muscle is. If you injure yourself, you will be further behind than if you take your time.

According to the ACE, you should spend about 30 minutes a week doing flexibility training. If you work out three days a week, you accomplish this goal with just 10 minutes of stretching after each workout. If you enjoy yoga, free classes are offered at the Peters Recreation Complex. These classes are set up so people of any fitness level can choose a class suitable for them.

No student really needs another event to add to their planner, but since stretching offers stress relief, among other benefits, it's worth taking the time during the day to institute a stretching regiment.

Kendall Hall is a senior in kinesiology and a certified personal trainer at the Peters Recreation Complex. Please send comments to sports@pub.ksu.edu.

Fan support should continue

The day began and ended with a mad dash of a huddled mass of students, and somewhere in-between, the K-State men's basketball team defeated KU for the first time in Manhattan in 25 years — the first-time ever in Bramlage Coliseum.

JOEL ASCHBRENNER

Many fans' days started several hours before 6 a.m. The cluster of students outside Peters Recreation Complex grew larger as the time grew closer to race across the parking lot for a spot in line. About ten minutes before 6 a.m., the anxiety became too much and the pack of students poured into the parking lot and raced towards the student entrance at Bramlage.

Hearing the mass of students stampeding across the parking lot, the students waiting in the Jardine apartment complex made a dash toward the line as well. One student, who hid curled up in a car, and another, who had spent the entire night hidden in the bushes near Bramlage, abandoned their hiding spots and darted toward the front of the line.

After the last of the students piled into the two lines near the bottom of the walkway, the tightly packed wait began. Students employed many tactics to stay warm throughout the day. Some brought tents, others sat in lawn chairs huddled around space heaters and dozens of students spent time thawing out in the heated bathrooms outside of Snyder Family Stadium.

Around 2 p.m., when the line almost reached Kimball Avenue, students started packing in tighter and tighter. No one could move until just before 5:30 p.m., when the doors were finally opened.

The mad rush of students after the game was similar. Students poured onto the court from seemingly everywhere, creating a giant mass of purple; this time without the tents and space heaters.

The only disappointing part of the day, which started and ended with such excitement, was realizing there probably would not be this much enthusiasm for any other basketball game this season. I understand KU is a hated rival, and the game had extra meaning for K-State fans, but the same fans should show excitement like that for every game the rest of the season.

Will there be several hundred students lined-up just to get in line at 6 a.m. every game this season? Probably not. But there is no reason there should be empty rows of bleachers at the top of the student section, or students coming late and leaving early for other games.

I also understand students will always want to camp out before the K-State-KU game, but it shouldn't end there. With the basketball team ranked second in the Big 12, there is no reason that fans shouldn't be excited for every game.

So tomorrow, when K-State faces Nebraska, I hope the fans can prove the annual K-State-KU game is not the only time K-State has a great atmosphere for basketball.

Joel Aschbrenner is a sophomore in pre-journalism mass communications. Please send comments to sports@pub.ksu.edu.

Spring club, intramural sports plan traveling, home schedules

By Brandon McAtee
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As the spring semester swings into full gear, so do K-State club and intramural sports. Friday will have a fresh schedule of activities involving many different K-State club sports, starting with lacrosse at Lindenwood University in St. Charles, Mo.

The water-skiing club also will compete Friday at the Winter Conference XI in Ann Arbor, Mich., which will be its only competition until April. In April, it will travel to Iowa State, followed by a trip to the University of Kansas.

Lacrosse will play back-to-back after Lindenwood, facing the University of Missouri-Rolla on the road before coming home to play Nebraska at Memorial Stadium on Feb. 23.

"Many sports have not started quite yet, but many will once it gets warmer out," said Travis Redeker, assistant director of sport clubs and the outdoor rental center at the Peters Recreation Center.

Many clubs will start play late in February, including softball at Ottawa University; paintball at Council Bluffs, Iowa; rowing at the Topeka Indoor; and women's volleyball will be host to the Cat Fight Tournament at the Rec. All these events will take place Feb. 23.

Trapshooting will be heading to Wyoming on Feb. 23-24. The Parachute Club will be host to an event on Feb. 29, in which any student can take safety classes to eventually skydive. To sign up for the Parachute Club, visit SkyDiveKstate.com.

Men's rugby will be at Benedictine on March 1 before playing host to Oklahoma State, University of Oklahoma and Truman State on March 8. The women's rugby team will be at Arkansas on the same day. The Ultimate Frisbee Club will attend the Frostbite Tournament in Springfield, Mo., March 1-2.

In April, both men's and women's soccer teams will be host to the Ed Chartrand Memorial Tournament at Memorial Stadium. Redeker said 15-20 teams are expected to attend. Cycling will host the KSU Invitational in April. Other sports dates are yet to be determined, including baseball and table tennis.

PEOPLE IN THE NEIGHBORHOOD

Cat's Den worker likes atmosphere, location

By Sarah Burford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Cat's Den might seem like just another convenience store. But its location makes all the difference, said Ashley Eck, cashier at the Cat's Den.

Eck, freshman in English education, was just hired at the Cat's Den last semester. She discovered the job opening at the Career Fair and was hired right away, she said.

On every day but Wednesday, people can find Eck working a two- to four-hour shift between classes. She said she sells everything from caffeine-loaded drinks to breakfast pastries and gets to enjoy the bustling atmosphere of the K-State Student Union in the mean time.

Q: Did you apply to many other places besides the Cat's Den when you were looking for a job?

A: This is actually the first place I applied. I grabbed a couple of applications from [the Career Fair], but this is the place I was interested in. So, I tried it and got the job right off the bat.

Q: What do you like best about your job?

A: I like that it's in the Union. There are a lot of people in here. That was the attraction for me in the first place, I guess — it's busy.

Q: What is your job description?

A: Cashier, I guess. I just ring things up and stock the store.

Q: How many people come in while you're working?

A: That depends. Sometimes it can get pretty busy in here — especially between classes. That's a pretty big rush. I would say between 50 and 100 people in one hour if we're really busy. And sometimes we're really slow — we'll get two or three people in an hour.

Q: What is one aspect you wish you could change about the job?

A: I wish there was more to do in the downtime.

Q: What is one of the most interesting interactions you've had while working?

A: I love it after game day. Especially this week was really fun. Everyone comes in with something to say about the game, whether it's in passing or they mention it to me personally. You can just tell how excited they were. And that's what's fun about being in the Union — it's kind of a central place, so you pick up on the excitement of the game more than you could running around campus or in classes.

Q: What items sell really well at the Cat's Den?

A: We sell a lot of breakfast stuff. Muffins and juice, I notice a lot. And the caffeine, I suppose, usually in the morning or right before lunch. A lot of people come in here between classes. Also, the architecture students at night — we get a lot of them. They stock up on sugar and the caffeine.

Q: Are there any strange items that people have bought before?

A: The funniest to me is when people come up, you know, it's kind of a convenience store, so you wouldn't expect people to get only one or two things. But it's really funny when architecture students, for example, or people trying to stock up for the weekend, will get a massive amount of stuff. It's kind of odd — you don't see it too terribly often.

Q: What made this job appealing to you?

A: I love that it is in the Union. It's convenient for me since I live in the dorms — I don't have to go really far or walk to work. There are a lot of people around here — there seems to be a lot going on usually.

Q: Do you meet a lot of people here when you're working?

A: Oh, it's usually just in passing, although there are definitely some regulars that come in all the time.

Q: What are some of the most popular magazines that people buy from the store?

A: I don't think we sell that many. I think we sell People quite a bit.

Q: What is some of your favorite snack food?

A: I'm a chocolate lover. I love candy bars. Hershey's Almond is my favorite.

City Commissioners to vote on street, runway designs

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The City council will vote on street design, airport-runway design and levee upgrades tonight at City Hall.

According to the meeting's agenda, Moro Street will be redesigned from Fourth Street to Third Street. The council will vote for or against HWS Consulting Group Inc. to draw up the new designs for the section of the street.

The second item on the agenda requests funds for redesigning runway No. 3 at the Manhattan Regional Airport.

"It enables us to better utilize the space and comply with [Federal Aviation Administration] requirements," said Commissioner Bruce Snead.

The airport runway needs to be moved 400 feet southwest to meet the FAA regulations allowing for a 1000 feet [Runway Safety Area].

"The issue in front of the commission tomorrow is to provide funding for the design for the project," said Peter Van Koren, airport director. "Later this year, we will request funding for the actual construction."

The U.S. Corps of Engineers changed the regulations concerning levees after Hurricane Katrina destroyed much of New Orleans and the surrounding area. The corps now requires a 15-foot-wide clear zone around the levee.

The last item on the agenda is to award the tree and brush removal contract to Arbor Masters Tree and Landscaping of Shawnee Mission, Kan.

"We always like to award it to local contractors, if it's feasible," Snead said. "[Voting for Arbor Master, not a local contractor] makes use of taxpayer dollars wisely, and they are the lowest bidder."

Local schools extend days by 12 minutes

By Hannah Blick
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan-Ogden School Board has voted to extend the remainder of the spring 2008 school days by 12 minutes each to make up for the days cancelled during the December ice storm, starting this week.

Four days of classes — from Tuesday, Dec. 11, 2007, to Friday, Dec. 14 — were canceled because of extreme weather conditions, said Michele Jones, USD 383 communications coordinator. She also said the district had two extra days built into the schedule, so since four days were missed, only two need to be made up.

"The state requires Kansas schools to have certain number of hours or days — Manhattan schools need 1,116 hours per school year," Jones said. "We all knew we would need to make up the time to the state; it was just a matter of what was the best option."

The administrative committee presented its extension options to the board, which included adding 12 minutes to each day, adding two full days after the scheduled end of the school year or adding two extra days within the calendar-like during spring break, Jones said.

She said after several meetings and votes, the board voted in favor of adding 12 minutes to every day, and Jones said this is the best option for the district. She also said most people seem to be pleased with the decision.

"In my opinion, it definitely will make up the time," she said. "We've had a toss-up on opinions from around the district but no major rumblings."

Dave Colburn, board member who first voted opposed to adding the 12 minutes, voted in favor of the addition the second time the idea was presented.

"The second time around, the administration had a much better plan put together," he said. "It was a more reasonable compromise that addressed the needs for schools at both the elementary and secondary levels."

Colburn said the administration and school board needed to explore all options to make the most informed decision for the students.

"I feel this is the best option," he said. "We absolutely want to come up with a way to make up quality education time."

The added time also will provide an extra two days in the case of more necessary weather cancellations, Jones said. Junction City and Geary County school districts both started adding 10 extra minutes to every day in January to make up their lost time from the December cancellations, and the Manhattan district has been in contact with the Geary County school district to learn how the system has been working for its schools, she said.

"We've figured out what will work best for each different school in the district," Jones said. "The elementary schools will start five minutes earlier and end seven minutes later, and the middle and high schools will just end 12 minutes later."

Manhattan High School principal Terry McCarty said the main concern he has heard from parents involves transportation. He said the daily bus schedule has been adjusted by five minutes to allow for students and parents to transition easily into the new schedule.

"We'll just need to make sure that we have our bells and passing periods lined up, along with making sure the bus schedule is properly adjusted."

McCarty said MHS will add four extra minutes to their fifth, sixth and seventh periods to account for the extra 12 minutes each day.

He said an additional 12 minutes each day is the best solution for making up the missed class time. He also said adding extra days could cause scheduling conflicts because many students become busy with family vacations, summer jobs and other activities after Memorial Day weekend.

"Our schools have always made it a priority to be done by Memorial Day," McCarty said. "People make all kinds of plans, and it would be hard to get people to come back after Memorial Day weekend."

"Twelve minutes will probably have the least impact and go over the easiest," he said. "Everybody has accepted the fact that we're going to have to make it up."

The extra 12 minutes will not affect after-school activities, McCarty said.

Cosby's 1968 show entertains K-State students

Will Ferrell isn't the first famous comedian this university has had the pleasure to hear speak on its campus.

In May 1968, the K-State student body also heard the stand-up performance of one of the most popular comedians of the time — Bill Cosby.

The following is a review of Cosby's act taken from the May 20, 1968, Collegian.

COSBY TICKLES FUNNY BONES

By Laura Scott

A mustachioed Bill Cosby tickled funny bones and fancies with his original comedy in Ahearn Field House Thursday night.

"Just sit back and relax," he told the audience, and they did, for an hour and a half concert of four lengthy skits filled with laughter.

Cosby, whose first five comedy albums each hit the one million-and-over mark in sales, showed that his humor is visual as well as aural. The comedian did not merely tell stories, he did them.

As Cosby roamed the stage, he alternated bursts of activity with moments of immobility. Changes in facial expression sent the audience from laughter to ovation.

His skits centered on topics of marriage, a night with his brother in a double bed, his days as an athlete at Temple University and a Cosby character by the name of Fat Albert.

Perhaps the best portrayal was that of the mediocre track star who became talented when he discovered a group of awestruck girls watching his meet.

Verbal sound effects from that of a runner jumping over a track bar to a crowd of girls giggling heightened the audience's enjoyment of the presentation. Such sound effects have become a Cosby trait.

The comedian's well-known tales of the woes of being a child were re-created in a story about two brothers sleeping together. One threatened the other that "turtle heads" would bite his toes if he didn't share his covers and so it went for fifteen minutes with a receptive audience recalling similar childhood experiences.

Cosby's humor radiated beyond that small world into another of a character called Fat Albert who had two dislikes: he didn't like the Frankenstein monster and he didn't like to run. The results of a confrontation with both problems proved hilariously funny.

Only once did he embarrass the audience, as he talked of the perils of pregnancy. Concluding that women brought the condition on herself, he said, "It all began with Eve," and added, "I'm sure glad Eve bit the apple first."

Facial and body antics combined with a mobile voice brought the characters in Cosby's skits across to the audience in a very personal way.

Appearing with the comedian was singer Leon Bibbs, whose careful selection of such songs as "If I Were a Carpenter," "Joey," and "500 Miles" added to the attraction of a show packed with entertainment.

Columns impress reader

Editor,

The headline for Mark Wampler's column drew me in right away while the good writing held me. The same goes for Jessica Hensley's column as well. I am finally pleasantly satisfied after reading the opinion page of the Collegian. I give props to the writers and the editors for finally publishing articles that are interesting, important and reflect the intellectual spirit of college students. I am impressed. I have felt this way for the past couple weeks of this semester and by Wampler's example have taken the time to write it down and let you know. Keep it up.

Tickets source of frustration

Editor,

Ladies and gentlemen who happen to be frequent readers of the Collegian: Whoever coordinates tickets for K-State should be much more aware of the number of seats that are available — as opposed to the number of seats that might be available — to individuals who have spent their hard-earned money and purchased tickets for said seats. In my experience, this is particularly true in the student section. I realize this is not a problem at every game; however, the games of the largest and greatest sophistication are what count. I wish K-State could realize that fact. Their inability to do so shows immense stupidity.

Caucus chance to say 'yes'

Editor,

Tonight students and seniors, Caucasians and Latinos, conservatives and liberals, people of all races, creeds and backgrounds have an amazing opportunity.

Tonight they — you — can stand for change and raise a collective voice for a new direction for our great country.

Tonight, you have the opportunity to reject the politics of cynicism and embrace the new politics of hope.

The Kansas primaries have never been more important. This year, we have a chance to influence the nomination of a candidate — before it's already a done deal in early primary states.

At 6:30 tonight in the K-State Student Union Ballroom, stand for change with Barack Obama. Stand for a new direction. Stand for America.

You can register to vote at the caucus if you are not registered here. All students can register to vote with their school address. There are no excuses: Attend the caucus tonight and ensure that we are not left with a choice between two politics-as-usual candidates.

Attend the caucus tonight and prove to the nation that "Yes, we can." Yes, we students can care about our country, and yes, we can turn out to send it in the direction we believe is right.

according to the Riley County Democratic Party newsletter.

"Since Kansas is a part of Super Tuesday, I think we'll have as much interest in Kansas as there will be in any other part of the country," Smethers said.

The Riley County Democratic Party last had a caucus during the 2004 presidential election, but it took place after Super Tuesday and Sen. John Kerry already was the Democratic frontrunner.

Voters who are at least 18 years of age or who will be 18 by Nov. 4 are eligible for participation in the Democratic caucus. Voters who are registered Democrat or any independents or Republicans who wish to change their party affiliation the night of the caucus can participate in Riley County, Smethers said.

Doors open at 6 p.m., and proceedings for the Democratic caucus promptly start at 7 p.m. All persons standing in line at 7 p.m. will be allowed caucus participation.

Once admitted inside the Union Ballroom, participants will go to the area of the room designated for their favorite candidate, and they can switch their support to another candidate if they decide to. At 7:30 p.m., caucus participants must be in place because caucus officials will conduct official head counts, according to the Riley County Democratic Party newsletter.

ty newsletter.

The following U.S. presidential candidates will appear on Tuesday's ballot: Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, D-N.Y.; Sen. John Edwards, D-N.C.; Rep. Dennis Kucinich, D-Ohio; Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill.; and New Mexico Governor Bill Richardson.

Though Edwards, Kucinich and Richardson have dropped out of the race, Smethers said they paid a filing fee with the state Democratic Party and still will appear on the caucus ballot.

Candidates must receive 15 percent of the vote of those in attendance for consideration as a state delegate, Smethers said. Kansas's Democratic caucus results will be used to determine Kansas' allocation of delegates among the Democratic presidential candidates to the Democratic National Convention in August.

Because of the Super Tuesday media attention and caucus evening time, Smethers said Kansas's Democratic caucus will draw significant attention and participation.

"This time, there is going to be some suspense involved," he said. "It's nice to know that if I go to vote in the caucus, my vote is just as important as the other 22 states in which the vote is going on."

REPUBLICAN CAUCUS

The Kansas Republican Party will have its caucus on the Saturday following Super Tuesday because its members thought having it mid-week would discourage participation, said Tim Bagby, Riley County Republican party chairman and K-State information technology manager with the Information Technology Assistance Center.

Riley County's caucus will take place at 10 a.m. in Pottruff Hall in CiCo Park. All results must be tallied and sent to the state party by 5 p.m. Saturday. Bagby said a Saturday caucus would garner separate media attention and participation from Super Tuesday.

"[Republican Party members] chose Saturday as a means of trying to get out of the huge pile of states voting," he said. "You'll have presidential candidates thinking after Super Tuesday, 'Where do I go next?'"

The last Republican caucus in Kansas took place in 1988, according to the party's state Web site.

"It's a tremendous organizational staff, so as a consequence, I think that's one reason why there hasn't been a Republican caucus since 1988," Bagby said.

In order to participate in the caucus, participants must have registered as a Republican in Kansas's Second Congressional District by Jan. 25 and must provide a photo ID at the caucus location, Bagby said. After the caucus introduction at 10 a.m., representatives from different campaigns will present information about their candidates, which will take about one hour. Ballots then will be distributed and voting will be by secret ballot.

The Kansas caucus results will determine the presidential candidate who Kansas delegates will support at the Republican National Convention in September 2008, according to the state party's Web site. In order to win the Kansas delegates, a candidate must win the majority vote in two of the four Congressional Districts.

The following U.S. presidential candidates will appear on Saturday's ballot: Former New York Mayor Rudy Giuliani; former Arkansas Governor Mike Huckabee; former Ambassador and Author Alan Keyes; Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz.; Rep. Ron Paul, R-Texas; former Massachusetts Governor Mitt Romney; and former Tennessee Senator Fred Thompson.

Giuliani and Thompson have officially dropped out of the race, but Republican caucus participants still can vote for them, Bagby said. If one Republican candidate should remain after Super Tuesday, Bagby said the caucus still would take place.

"Odds are pretty good that there will be more than one candidate remaining [after Super Tuesday]," he said.

turnout out of all the age groups.

"The decisions made by the next president of the United States will have a lot more to do with you and your generation than they will to do with me and my generation," she said.

After stopping at K-State, the governor continued her tour at the University of Kansas and ended in Topeka at Washburn University.

Sebelius has been courted by all the major Democrats, according to the Associated Press. She made her announcement to support Sen. Obama the day after she gave the Democrats' response to President Bush's State of the Union address Jan. 28.

Sebelius said it has not been easy to choose which Democratic candidate to support, as she has experience balancing being a moderate Democrat who has succeeded in a Republican state, but she said she felt Sen. Obama is the best candidate.

"Frankly, I want the next president to be somebody who actually can reach across party lines - it's the way I work here in Kansas," Sebelius said. "I've run and won in a state where 77 percent of the voters are registered Democrat, so I know what it takes to actually get Independents to support me and work with the Republicans."

She said the main reason she endorsed Obama is because of his ability to unite America. "People are tired of being told how different from one another we are, as opposed to somebody who reminds us over and over again what our common values are and what our common vision is," she said.

The governor warned students that this presidential election will be a tough race all the way to the end and encouraged them to be involved throughout the whole process, beginning with the caucus and ending with the final ballots. She also said students should encourage their friends to caucus and vote.

Sebelius highlighted the rare opportunity Kansans have to give their input on who the presidential nominees will be.

"Kansas doesn't get paid attention to very often," she said.

Matt Wagner, K-State student body president and Obama supporter agreed with Sebelius.

"I don't think we've ever seen something like this before in the state of Kansas in the area of politics this early in the stages of the national race," Wagner said. "I think this will bring much more awareness for our students ... I think this is one way in which we will see excitement for Super Tuesday as well as the Republican race coming up on the 9th."

With only a few empty seats and students watching from all sides, the Courtyard was full of students, faculty and staff that supported Sen. Obama, were undecided or simply wanted to hear Sebelius speak.

Andre America, member of K-State Students for Obama, said when he first heard the governor was coming to campus to endorse Obama, he decided he would not miss hearing her for anything.

America said he thought Kathleen Sebelius coming to K-State sends a powerful message to students.

"For the first time, you have someone [Obama] who is starting to make you believe what America stands for - so there's no more black, white and hispanic boundaries - we are all Americans."

Obama wins

Joslyn Brown | COLLEGIAN

In support for their candidate, Barack Obama, students cheer during the Democratic Caucus in the K-State Student Union Ballroom. Obama won with 822 votes over Clinton's 212, which means he earned six delegates while she earned one.

Senator receives clear support in 22nd district

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Young and old local residents braved the harsh weather to gather in the K-State Student Union and throw their support for Sen. Barack Obama in the Kansas Democratic Caucus.

The Illinois senator, riding on the strong support of college students, won nearly four times as many votes as Sen. Hillary Clinton, D-N.Y., in the 22nd Kansas Senate district, which encompasses Manhattan and the surrounding areas. Obama won 822 votes while Clinton won 212.

"It blew away every thing we thought," said Bryan Cox, member of the Students for Obama at K-State. "Our goal was to get around 400 Obama supporters here, and we more than doubled that."

Cox, a junior in economics and political science, said it was Obama's message that drew a large number of students and area supporters to the caucus in the blizzard-like weather.

"Primarily that's because of the message that Obama has that unifies Democrats, Independents and Republicans," Cox said. "[The turnout] means that they actually believe, that they are actually dedicated to something, and that politics is not that annoying thing that gives you a phone call every once and a while. It's about actually having an impact on peoples' lives."

Though Clinton only received close to 1/4 of the votes, Ruth Schrum, a group leader for the Clinton supporters at the caucus, said she was still pleased at the turnout.

"I'm pretty happy with the results because Hillary didn't have an organized group here as much as the Obama people did, and that's mostly college students," Schrum said. "We get a delegate, and that's great."

The caucus started at 7 p.m. in the Union Ballroom. For about an hour, more than 1,000 area residents packed into the Ballroom, separating into their respective candidates' groups. From the start, it was apparent Obama had clear support at the Manhattan caucus. When representatives from the two candidates spoke, the yells for Obama were almost a roar, while the yells for Clinton were not as loud.

Obama received six delegates from the 22nd district, while Clinton received one. Overall, Obama received about 70 percent of the delegates in Kansas, according to CNN.

Soldier dies from explosion

By Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Fort Riley soldier died from an explosion Thursday in Baghdad.

Capt. Michael A. Norman, 36, died of wounds suffered when his vehicle encountered an improvised explosive device Jan. 31 in Baghdad, according to the Department of Defense.

Originally from Killeen, Texas, Norman was a military intelligence officer. He served on a transition team assigned to the 1st Brigade, 1st Infantry Division, where he helped prepare small teams of American soldiers to teach and mentor their Afghan counterparts.

Norman entered the Army in February 1992 and deployed in August 2007. This was his first deployment in support of the Global War on Terrorism.

To date, 143 Fort Riley soldiers and airmen have been killed while serving in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom.

As of Saturday, at least 3,943 members of the U.S. military had died since the beginning of the Iraq war in March 2003, according to an Associated Press count.

The Fort Riley Public Affairs Office contributed to this report.

PROUD awards struggling students

By Joe Vossen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One year after students donated more than $60,000 in the first student fund-raising campaign at K-State, the distribution of money raised through the 2007 K-State PROUD campaign continues.

The KSU Student Foundation, the organization that oversees the annual campaign and award process, formed a committee to allocate the donations and created two funds: the Hero Awards and Proud Awards, said Ben Tryon, vice president of allocations for the foundation.

Tryon said the type of student who receives the two awards differs. The PROUD Awards are given to K-State students who are experiencing financial hardship.

"The students who win the PROUD Awards are individuals struggling to make ends meet," said Tryon, senior in chemical engineering. "They have exhausted every avenue of financial aid offered by K-State. These are students who run into dire circumstances with medical bills, child care, flooded apartments — you name it. These students have run into bad luck and can't make ends meet."

Tryon said the names of students who receive PROUD Awards are kept confidential to protect their privacy. Applications for PROUD Awards are considered on a rolling basis, and the application is available on the foundation Web site, www.found.k-state.edu/studentfoundation.

The foundation awarded $30,000 in the fall semester, Tryon said. In addition, five students received the first Hero Awards last week in recognition of outstanding campus commitment.

K-State students reconnect to God through sacrifice

By Amanda Keim
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Becoming closer to God: This mission, adopted by St. Isidore's Catholic Church, is celebrated by each of its members throughout the year. As Ash Wednesday approaches, however, this mission becomes increasingly stronger.

Ash Wednesday, which falls on Feb. 6 this year, is the introduction to a 40-day practice called Lent.

"It began with the desire to do extra spiritual preparation in getting ready to celebrate the death and resurrection of our Savior," said St. Isidore's Chaplain Keith Weber. "In many ways, it's like going on a long retreat."

Lent is a retreat away from desires and cravings that Weber said often might lead individuals away from the Lord. Many students give up eating candy or ice cream as a way to connect with and remember the sacrifice that Jesus made for humanity.

By comparing Lent to a weekend retreat, Weber said he hopes to emphasize that the practice of giving something up for Lent is meant to refocus oneself on God.

"Our primary goal in life is to come close to God, and there are practices in our daily lives that often hinder that goal, and we should work to overcome those hindrances every day of our lives," Weber said. "Every once in a while, it's good to put those things to the side. A weekend retreat is a good thing to go on and help us focus on our relationship with God. We try to take a little extra time out of our daily lives and focus on what it is that keeps us from growing spiritually."

Jenna Kennedy, senior in microbiology, has been a member of St. Isidore's for four years. Last year, Kennedy said she gave up ice cream and increased her involvement in the community.

"I think it's always something that's been useful to me as just a way to draw closer to God," Kennedy said. "So each time you're able to recognize the meaning behind whatever your Lent sacrifice has been, it reminds you of your faith. I

Student body VP to run for SGA president

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student body president Matt Wagner's term is coming to an end and as he prepares to graduate, student body vice president Lydia Peele has decided to launch a bid to fill his shoes.

Peele, senior in mathematics education, is running with Robert Swift, junior in political science. Swift has been a senator in Student Governing Association and also an at-large member for the governmental relations committee. He is still an active SGA member.

"We both love K-State and want to see the best for K-State," Peele said.

"I've always wanted to serve K-State at this capacity," Swift said. "When Lydia and I decided to run, I couldn't think of a better running mate."

The biggest issue Peele and Swift said they want to focus on is making changes to Lafene Health Center for the benefit of the students.

"Many students do not feel they get the care needed from Lafene and this has to change," Swift said.

Peele said she learned a variety of student governing responsibilities during her term as vice president alongside Wagner.

"The president and vice president work very closely," she said.

The main difference for Peele, if elected, would be working more with the Kansas Board of Regents and administrators as a representative for K-State students, she said.

As vice president, Peele has been involved in many changes throughout campus, including the elimination of the $50 application fee to study abroad. She also helped start the Good Neighbors program, which gives community members and K-State students a chance to get involved in the community and work together.

To begin their campaign, Peele and Swift are hosting a campaign kick-off party at Tank's Tavern Friday.

Peele also participates in a weekly radio show on KSDB-FM 91.9 with president Matt Wagner, which informs students of current SGA issues and possible solutions. The show airs every Monday at 5 p.m.

CITY COMMISSION

City gives green light for street design

By Corene Brisendine
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Despite the blowing snow Tuesday night, the city council met and passed all three general agenda items 5-0.

The city has entered into an engineering agreement to redesign the landscaping and lighting along Moro Street between Fourth Street and Third Street.

Rob Ott, city engineer, answered questions for the commission before the commission voted 5-0 in favor of the improvements.

The second item, designing the moving of runway three at the Manhattan Municipal Airport, passed 5-0 to give the airport a $195,000 bond to enter into an agreement with the Federal Aviation Administration to design the moving of the runway navigational aids.

"This is the next step in the process of a project that began in the 1990s," said Peter Van Kuren, Manhattan airport director.

Ott returned to center stage before the council to present the tree removal contract along the Manhattan levee.

The levee extends about five miles along the Kansas River following the edge of Manhattan.

Trees and shrubs extend roots into the levee creating seepage points that cause soil erosion weakening the levee, said Ott.

The U.S. Corp of Engineers now requires a 15-foot clear zone along the levee to prevent these problems.

The council voted 5-0 in favor of awarding the contract to the lowest bidder, Arbor Masters Tree and Landscaping of Shawnee Mission, Kan.

Study shows smoking bans cause drop in business, affect economy

After failing to pass a statewide smoking ban in 2007, liberal Mission Hills, Kan., Republican Sen. David Wyson is on the warpath once again to outlaw smoking in restaurants and bars.

The bill, which was just given to the Senate Judiciary Committee, would force counties to put the issue on their November 2008 ballots. Counties across the state would vote to outlaw smoking on a county-by-county basis.

BRETT KING

According to the Kansas City Star on Jan. 30, the Kansas Health Policy Authority believes the smoking ban would be "a way to improve health and reduce the cost smokers put on the state's health-care system."

Wyson said, as reported by the Lawrence Journal-World on Jan. 30, "I believe this bill will save tens of thousands of Kansas lives." However, he has no problem accepting blood money from tobacco taxes to pay for programs across the state.

Don Saylor, president and CEO of the Kansas Restaurant and Hospitality Association, said in a story in the Wichita Eagle, "KRHA has opposed smoking bans or restrictions because they remove a business owner's right to choose the smoking environment in which [they] desire to operate. Additionally, [bans] remove the freedom of choice for both employees and customers to choose the environment they wish to work in and patronize."

Arguments against smoking bans tend to be based around freedom of choice, both for the owner and patrons, and economic effects. Restaurant and bar owners have explained how they will be affected economically by a decline in sales if a smoking ban is passed.

Supporters of the ban, like Wyson, believe there is a lack of evidence to prove the claim of economic damage. However, a compressive study of the economic effect of smoking bans conducted by Michael Pakko, research officer for the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis, has shown the danger for small business owners.

According to Pakko's research, since January 2007, when Columbia, Mo., issued a city-wide smoking ban, overall sales in restaurants and bars declined sharply by 5 percent in less than a year.

Christina Forsberg | COLLEGIAN

This staggering decrease is emphasized by the fact that sales only increased 6.8 percent from 2002 through 2006.

Pakko said in his report, "According to local press reports, owners of at least four establishments have cited the smoking ban as a factor in their decision to close their doors in 2007."

Smoking bans are not only harmful to business and state revenue but also to the labor market. According to "The Effect of Smoking Bans on Bars and Restaurants: An Analysis of Changes in Employment," published in the Berkley Electronic Journal of Economic Analysis and Policy on Feb. 8, 2007, there has been a significant decrease in employment for bars in smoke-free regions. This decrease has ranged from 4 to 16 percent across the country.

Local and state governments have no right to ban the use of a legal product in public, especially when the state gladly accepts tax revenue from the product.

There are plenty of nonsmoking alternatives for individuals who do not want to be in a smoke-filled environment. Prohibition failed, and smoking bans will too.

Entertainment should offer break from reality

I saw the movie "Rambo" this weekend. I saw the most graphic, unrestrained violence of my entire life poorly disguised as social commentary.

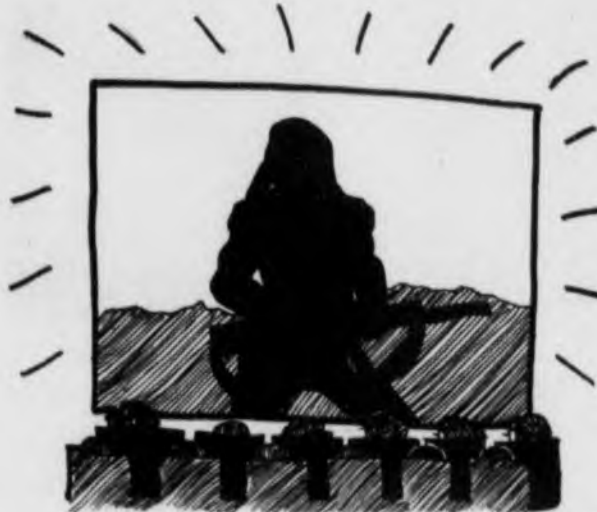

Bottom line: It was awesome.

The story goes like this: John Rambo, a Vietnam veteran, moves to Burma after being mistreated in the United States and resides quietly as a snake catcher on the river. When some Colorado church missionaries enter war-torn Burma to hand out medicine and Christian literature to locals, they want him to be their guide. Put simply, Rambo kills the bad guys and saves the missionaries, who now have a new outlook on life. It wasn't particularly good, and Martin Scorsese would most likely turn away in disgust. But like I said, it was awesome.

So what happened to movies like this, where some evil guy in aviator sunglasses is wreaking havoc and a huge good guy with a U.S. flag tattoo cuts his head off? Where is our Van Damme, our Seagal? When did movies, television and music become so literal? Why do people pay $8 at the box office to see a movie that will leave them depressed for a week?

TYLER SMITH

Christina Forsberg | COLLEGIAN

Television is even worse, with shows like "Law and Order: Special Victims Unit" and plot lines that can turn stomachs. "CSI" shows people dying, but with realistic death scenes and decomposition. Come on now, where's the fun in that?

With how depressing everyday news is and with the war going on, I think people could use a little distraction. We need more movies like "Rambo", more larger-than-life heroes who soak up bullets like a sponge and spit out one-liners. A TV lawyer doesn't leave you feeling good inside, but John Wayne sure can.

I wonder when the switch took place - when families like the Cartwrights were replaced with the Sopranos? Real crime moved in and honest-to-goodness entertainment went out, and what we are left with is an entertainment business that glorifies the bad guy and makes hardworking people look like idiots.

It would be nice to go back to the way Hollywood was. In some ways it already has - "Rambo" is a good example of that. But it will be a long time before we can take a break from being so serious in every aspect of our lives and just relax enough to watch some entertaining TV. Maybe we'll let some plot holes go even if it's not "realistic" enough.

Until that time, I think I'll just watch old reruns of "Bonanza," because I have enough reality in my life already.

I just saw two guys sitting in a parked car rocking out and singing to "Love Song" by Sara Bareilles.

In the voice of Forrest Gump: Dalonte Hill, what are you doing?

My financial aid was horrible this year. I need more money.

Dang it, where's my peanut butter?

Dear girl whose life I saved: you're welcome, and don't worry. I'd never really trample you.

Is it politically correct for a 22-year-old to get a restraining order against a 15-year-old?

Matt, how can I get my roommate to try anal?

Hey, do you know the Fourum's number?

Britney Spears is in the mental ward, but I saw Kevin Federline doing some positions in the Collegian.

Melissa's body wash just spilled all over her drawer.

This just in: Anal sex is still gay.

To the girl at the party Friday: Why him and not me?

Could someone please explain to us who the Stuni guy is? We are incredibly confused.

Matt Combes: you're playing ball, but clearly you're batting for the wrong team.

Did I miss the memo about the Classy Cats being a sorority?

Hey, Matt Combes: By the way, this isn't KU. Stop talking about anal sex.

My butt: Exit only.

Jacob Pullen, come to the third floor of Ford and meet your mystery date.

I had sex with someone last night. Was that you?

For some reason, your article on anal sex made me think of the movie "Philadelphia."

Matt Combes, you are a genius. I tip my hat to you, sir.

Sex is my Nyquil.

So, apparently the official opening act for the Funny or Die Comedy Tour is the Westboro Baptist Church.

Girl at the rec: Let's do coffee.

To the people wrestling at the rec: the rec is for working out, not foreplay.

The two things I like best in the morning are a nice cup of coffee and reading about butt sex.

I work with you at the Derby, and your eyes melt my heart. Please go with me to the masquerade ball.

To the girl dancing out a sunroof in the Taco Bell drive-through: Rock on.

I think Ron Burgundy needed to do his own version of the Ron Prince stomp.

Can anybody tell me what the Congress has to do with professional baseball?

I hate Uggs boots. They make fat chicks wear tight pants.

I think I speak for the entire Kansas State student body when I say I was completely converted to the beliefs of the Westboro Baptist Church after their picket at the Will Ferrell show.

So, as it turns out, the Jayhawk that Will Ferrell beat up tonight was actually a chloroformed KU student.

Professor develops relationships to help students learn

By Jenna Scavuzzo
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Through his compassionate teaching style and relentless aim to create light bulbs in students' minds, math professor Dale Hawkinson has become famous on campus for turning the daunting subject into an area of confidence for K-State students.

Hawkinson, who has been a math professor at K-State for 26 years, teaches intermediate algebra, college algebra, general calculus and linear algebra.

He said helping his students make the connection between what they already know and what they aspire to know is his ultimate goal each day in the classroom. He does this best by meeting individually with as many students as he can.

"Talking with students one-on-one best helps me find out what they're having trouble understanding and helps them tie that to something they already know," Hawkinson said. "There is a tendency for students to see math as a box with 600 confusing things in it, and I help them to deconstruct that box and understand what they're being asked to do. I don't give them direct answers, but ask them questions to lead them to where they want to go."

Hawkinson said having a personable relationship with each of his students and having the freedom to adapt the course and materials to his students are the most valuable ways to help his students comprehend math concepts at the collegiate level.

"Developing a relationship with each student, as much as they'll allow me, is my favorite aspect of teaching math," Hawkinson said. "There has to be some level of connection between the student and professor, and seeing someone think through the question and discover they can actually answer it is what I work for each day. My relationship with my students is open, respectful and friendly."

Some of his students are appreciative of Hawkinson's personable teaching approach and believe it helps them better understand the material.

"His class is set up for success — he helps you bring out what you know and apply it to what you're learning," said Sean Steele, freshman in open option.

Steele is in Hawkinson's college algebra class.

"He takes it slow and breaks it up into easy sections. I don't look at him as a professor but as a friend who's helping us with math. I am much more comfortable and confident to do math on my own now, and he's a really easy guy to talk to."

Hawkinson is a graduate of K-State and said he did not decide to teach until his junior year. He said he changed his major five times after starting in electrical engineering. He began considering math education because math had always been his favorite subject in school.

He found a job opening for a temporary instructor on campus in 1981, so he applied for and was instantly hired. He said he worked for three years as a temporary instructor in the math department. Once the university administration changed the structure of intermediate algebra, Hawkinson became a full-time professor.

Hawkinson said he has developed as a teacher over the years through listening to students and their concerns with math. He also bettered his teaching skills through observing professors he admired and communicating with his large family, which includes 11 children and nine grandchildren.

"Watching other good teachers and talking to students has most developed me as a teacher," Hawkinson said. "There were a few professors here that were really good at teaching in the sense of not telling but leading. The greatest lesson I have learned is to be slow to speak and quick to listen."

"Being married and having children has been the greatest contribution with learning to teach. Character and concern for others is developed in the home, and those are important factors in teaching."

Hawkinson's patience, soothing voice, calming character and friendly demeanor have made impressions on many across campus.

"He's a very patient and thorough man, and he believes anyone can learn," said

Judith Lynch, director of the academic assistance center. "I once heard a student describe him perfectly in a quote — 'Dale Hawkinson could teach algebra to a rock.'"

Students said they enjoy his acquired listening approach, as well as his step-by-step teaching method.

"Mr. Hawkinson is very willing to take time out of his day to help you, no matter how busy he is," said Misty Davis, sophomore in human nutrition and student in Hawkinson's general calculus class. "He tells us how to do the problem step-by-step. I look up to him in a way — I see him more as a peer than a teacher."

Language program helps non-native speakers succeed in U.S. classes

By Holly Campbell
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For Ann Carter, teaching English to non-native speakers meant combining her background in English with her love of other cultures.

Carter has been an instructor of English as a second language with K-State's English Language Program since it began in 1986, she said.

K-State's ELP provides international students with a heavy dose of English instruction, said Enid Cocke, instructor and ELP founder. Students in the intensive program take 18 hours of English instruction, Cocke said.

"Undergraduates are admitted completely on their academic credentials. They do not have to submit a language score up front to be admitted," said ELP director Mary Wood.

Students take a placement test upon arriving at K-State to determine their levels of English comprehension, Cocke said.

The ELP is undergoing accreditation, Cocke said. The process of becoming accredited by a national commission, which can take almost two years, involves the staff attending a workshop, a year-long self-study, submitting numerous documentation and a four-day site visit, Cocke said.

The ELP includes students like Dai Wei, freshman in electrical engineering, who came from China and is now a full-time ELP student. So far, Wei said he is enjoying life at K-State.

"It is a quiet place, and the people here are nice and friendly," he said.

Prior to the program's existence, K-State had to turn away students who did not know enough English to keep up in regular classes, Cocke said.

"At that point, the departments were saying to students, 'Your English isn't good enough, so go some place else and study at an intensive English program and then come here,'" Cocke said. "And of course, the students went [to other universities] and stayed there, so we were losing very good students who were fully qualified in their disciplines but just needed some more English."

In response to an urgent demand among graduate programs to allow international students into K-State, Cocke, a then-instructor in the English department, spent a year researching the possibility of having an intensive English program, Cocke said.

The program admitted its first students in fall 1986.

The ELP is required to be self-sufficient, meaning there must be enough students enrolling to cover all costs of running the program, Cocke said.

"I know the provost was very relieved when, from the first semester, we were in the black," Cocke said.

"Traditionally, a lot of [ELP students] were people from abroad who simply wanted to improve their English and applied directly to us," Cocke said, but the program is now largely students who want to earn degrees at K-State.

From its first year, the program gradually built up, and then, after the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks students had difficulty obtaining visas, and the program had a decrease in size, Carter said.

Over the past few years

new recruitment efforts, particularly in Saudi Arabia and China, have greatly increased the ELP's enrollment numbers with the possibility of growing even larger, Carter said.

"We started with two or two-and-a-half [class] levels and three instructors, and I think the first semester we had 56 students," Cocke said.

This semester, there are 167 students from 21 countries enrolled full-time in the ELP.

There are 16 full-time instructors and three who split their time between teaching and administration, Wood said.

Wei said his favorite parts of ELP classes are listening and speaking practice.

In class, a variety of resources — including textbooks, videos and real-world materials, like The New York Times — are used to help students improve their English, Carter said.

Classes are taught entirely in English; students sometimes bring bilingual dictionaries, but they are encouraged to stop using them in intermediate and advanced classes, she said.

K-State's ELP is different than many other universities' because it has its own language lab, with special software and supplementary learning materials, Wood said.

Also beneficial is the ELP's advising staff, Wood said.

As opposed to academic advising, this staff helps students deal with life in a new country.

"I know our advising staff has helped with things like roommate problems or food problems, or they have found them soccer teams to play on or jazz ensembles to play with," Wood said. "They're there to help students make that transition into a community."

Like their students, ELP instructors face a variety of difficulties.

"You could have a range of abilities within a class, so there's the challenge of making sure everybody is learning and being challenged," Carter said. "For one person, the lesson's a little hard; for another person it's a little easy."

"Sometimes international students don't want to take an English class at the university, understandably. But based on our assessment, they wouldn't succeed in the university, and they can be frustrated."

"We're very happy for them to succeed and go on, but if we know the chances are good that they will fail because of English, it is our job to protect them. The departments of the university ask that of us. It's our job not to let a student out until that student can succeed in the program."

Students like Wei depend on ELP instructors and staff to help them through life at K-State.

"[ELP instructors] give me advice on how to improve my English. Also, when I ask questions, they are very patient, listen and answer," Wei said.

Despite the challenges she faces in her occupation, Carter said she is happy to do her job in the ELP.

"It's really wonderful to have the variety of students in each class from different cultures, getting to know them. It's a very rewarding job," Carter said.

Will Ferrell stars in new movie about an old subject

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

In 1976, there were crazy clothing styles, big hair and very different attitudes as compared to the present.

There were also two basketball leagues at the time: the National Basketball Association and the American Basketball Association. In Will Ferrell's new sports-related movie, "Semi-Pro," the focus is the final season of the ABA and its pending merger with the larger NBA.

The ABA stood apart from the NBA with the use of a 30-second shot clock and a 3-point line. In some ways, the ABA was as different from the other league as 1976 is from 2008. Ferrell described the 1970s as a fun time period to depict in a movie.

"I think it's kind of a remarkable time period where, when we look back and think back to clothing styles and hairdos and attitudes, that was actually a time period that happened," Ferrell said. "People actually wore the clothes they wore and looked the way they looked and thought, 'I'm looking great. I will never get higher than this.'"

While the ABA produced such future NBA stars as Julius Erving, George Gervin, Moses Malone and Artis Gilmore, other players who made up the league were from the regular working class and had regular jobs when they weren't playing.

While the league was considered professional, not all salaries were comparable throughout the league's nine seasons, and financial problems caused many teams to close operations, similar to the plight of many semi-professional teams and leagues that struggle to exist today. Ferrell described one instance of a contract discussion as an example of why the league had a semi-professional feel to it.

"I was reading something recently that this one guy wanted $10,000 and a new refrigerator, and they came back, and the counter offer was $10,000 and a used refrigerator, and he said, 'I will take it,'" he said.

Some of Ferrell's research came from the book "Loose Balls: The Short Wild Life of the American Basketball Association" by Terry Pluto. The book features memorable stories from various former players about the league and its players, including one of Ferrell's favorites.

"[One] of the classic stories [was when] Marvin Barnes, who played for the St. Louis Spirit, refused to fly on a plane that was changing time zones because he was afraid it was a time machine," he said. "That's probably my favorite because I have those same fears myself."

Ferrell is not new to the idea of a sports movie or sports for that matter. "Semi-Pro" is the fourth sports-based movie Ferrell has starred in, and he is a known fan of USC football.

In his life, Ferrell experienced athletic success at his high school, where he was a kicker for the football team and played basketball and baseball. Ferrell summed up his stature as a student-athlete with just one word.

"The word excellent comes to mind," he said. "I started playing soccer when I was a kid, started playing basketball in eighth grade and played in high school, played baseball, played football; so I was kind of a funny jock."

'Spygate' will be big offseason NFL issue

Normally this weekend's Pro Bowl would bring the NFL season to a close and give way to calmer headlines around the league.

Instead, get ready for a completely different offseason, similar to what the MLB has seen with months of headlines related to the U.S. Congress.

These headlines will appear thanks to the 18-1 New England Patriots and their illegal videotaping of teams.

If you thought "Spygate," as it is now called, was put to rest early in the season, then you were surprised last week when Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., raised questions about NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell's handling of the case.

Mostly, Specter is concerned with the quick response of destroying all evidence and ignoring reports from former Patriots employees who claimed the team's practice of taping teams was not new.

These concerns came from Super Bowl XXXIX when Specter's home state Philadelphia Eagles lost 24-21 to the Patriots.

For Specter, the Eagles' loss in that Super Bowl, coupled with the recent "Spygate" news, has led him to personally investigate whether the Patriots have been cheating through their Super Bowl wins.

If Specter is right and strong evidence comes to light to prove the Patriots' guilt, it could provide clues as to how the Patriots were able to win three Super Bowls in four years, each time by a field goal.

Maybe the Patriots just sat back and waited to strike until the end of the game when they could use their secret scouting to maneuver through the defense and set up the game-winning field goal.

Ignoring Patriots quarterback Tom Brady's massive success, Specter said he thinks the quarterback possibly knew where to pass it depending on the defense.

Using these techniques, which have been called cheating by outsiders, is nothing new, some former players, including ESPN analyst and former Eagles quarterback Ron Jaworski, are saying.

Jaworski claimed last week his team knew some defensive sets and coverages going into games and devised a system of the backup quarterback dropping a towel for Jaworski to switch the play to a long pass.

Jaworski said on occasion, the play resulted in a touchdown, and in his mind, there is nothing wrong with stealing signals from other teams.

If the practice is just a part of the game, then you could call Patriots coach Bill Belichick a genius for taping teams. He took advantage of some teams playing nice guy and did what it takes to win.

Still the likelihood the Patriots, and Goodell could catch a bad rap is relatively high.

While some Congress members might support the Patriots' practices and some probably won't care, it will be those who are against it who will dig until all answers are found.

So though the season is over, Specter will leave no stone unturned in his search for the truth. If Specter gets his way, the Patriots might have to turn the Lombardi trophy over to the Eagles team, which he believes was cheated.

For the sake of NFL history, I hope Specter won't force Goodell to make another bad decision in his short time as commissioner.

Maybe sometime during the off-season, Goodell will change his mind and free Pacman Jones. But don't get your hopes up.

K-State fishing team hopes for possible TV coverage for student anglers

By Joel Aschbrenner
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State fishing team might not get a lot of recognition, but one member said being on the team does provide opportunities for exciting fishing and good competition.

Junior Josh Herrman, former vice president of the team, fished in the Ultimate Match Fishing Tournament College Edition, which was covered by the Outdoor Channel. The tournament pitted 12 college anglers against each other in a bracket-style competition at Oneida Lake, N.Y., near Syracuse.

Herrman said the tournament was unlike any other because the competitors actually shared a boat. The boat had a line down the middle that the competitors could not cross or cast over. Herrman said he barely lost in the first round to an angler from the University of Iowa.

"They said I lost by the closest margin ever in the history of their program, which was 1/100 of a pound," he said.

Herrman said this is both his and former club president, Casey Smith's, last season with the team because they are graduating, leaving the team looking for more members. Both Herrman and Smith said they had never fished in tournaments before they came to college and that the team is a great way for someone to get involved in competitive fishing.

"We basically haven't started anything, so if there is a new guy who wants to join, it's the perfect time," Herrman said.

The team, which consists of eight members, will begin competing again close to spring break. They recently chose junior Ben Fuchs as the new president of the team. He will fish in four club qualifiers at lakes near the Manhattan area. The team uses a point system for the qualifying rounds, and the top scorers on the team get to represent the school at national tournaments.

Smith said the team competes in two national bass tournaments in the fall — one aired on ESPN and the other on Fox Sports Net. The team's top two performers will fish at the ESPN tournament, and the Fox Sports Net tournament takes the team's top four anglers. Smith also said 50-100 teams represent more than 30 universities from all over the country.

At the end of March, four members of the team will travel to Lake Dardanelle, Ark., near Russellville, to compete in an invitational tournament hosted by Arkansas Tech University.

Smith said when he started, the team competed in small tournaments, mostly for weekend anglers and only had competitions on the side for college teams. But he said the sport is really growing now.

"It's really booming," Smith said. "With teams popping up all over the nation

Women student-athletes honored for academics

The women's basketball and rowing teams apparently weren't just studying its playbooks last semester.

Everyone on the 11-member basketball squad was named to the Fall 2007 Big 12 Commissioner's Honor Roll. To qualify, student-athletes must achieve at least a 3.0 grade point average for the previous semester. K-State's women's basketball team is the only one in the Big 12 Conference to recognize all its members for this honor.

Earning a 4.0 GPA were sophomore guard Kari Kincaid, junior forward Shalee Lehning, senior forward Carolyn McCullough and junior forward Danielle Zanotti.

McCullough also received the Outstanding Senior Award for Communication Science and Disorders for last fall. She was a 2006-07 Academic All-Big 12 selection. Only four players were selected who had a 4.0 GPA.

From the rowing team, 47 members were named to the honor roll, with nine recognized for having a 4.0 GPA. Those student-athletes were seniors Melissa Cessna, Heather Hoffman, Ashley Krueger, Whitney Revell, and Bjai Rice, juniors Michael Knoll, and Elizabeth Walter; sophomore Andrea Hatch and freshman Amanda Weishaar.

The K-State rowers had an average of 3.083 GPA throughout its 70-person roster. Last fall was the best finish in the 12-year history of the team.

Vitale to return to broadcasting

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Say something. Anything. Just do the very thing that made him famous. But Dick Vitale couldn't. Tears welled up in his eyes as he imagined his beloved career crashing to an end.

Then the doctor suggested he count to 10. And with the simplest of words, Vitale heard his own voice again for the first time in weeks.

ESPN's hyperkinetic college basketball announcer will call his first game in more than two months Wednesday after recovering from throat surgery. It was the cruelest of ailments for the man who yelled his way to becoming a household name. His treatment? A ban on speaking.

"There was a moment there I thought I'd never be behind a microphone again," Vitale said Monday on a conference call, sounding a bit subdued but very much like himself.

Told he could return to the air in early February, Vitale checked the schedule and found some serendipitous timing: He could make his comeback on the biggest of stages, the Duke-North Carolina game.

Vitale wasn't allowed to utter a word between his Dec. 18 surgery and a Jan. 13 doctor's appointment. And when he got the long-awaited go-ahead, he opened his mouth and nothing came out.

Viewers might not have noticed anything the last few years, but the 68-year-old Vitale conceded he was "bluffing" his way through games.

"I'm going to tell you, every game I was a worried, nervous wreck about what was coming out of my throat," he said.

He was always hoarse; his throat was constantly sore. After many a game, he was on the phone with his boss at ESPN, Dan Steir, crying.

"That's how really down I was," Vitale said. "I can't go to the game and just enjoy doing the game and be excited about doing the game and not worried about my damn throat."

Vitale finally got an appointment with Dr. Steven Zeitels of Massachusetts General Hospital, a specialist who has treated Julie Andrews and Aerosmith lead singer Steven Tyler. Zeitels found ulcers on his left vocal cord and said there was a chance they were cancerous. The news was good: No cancer. Not speaking wasn't so hard, Vitale insisted, which becomes more believable considering complications from the surgery resulted in bladder problems that distracted him from his original ailment.

MAN WHO INTRODUCED THE BEATLES TO YOGA DIES

THE HAGUE, Netherlands — Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, a guru to the Beatles who introduced the West to transcendental meditation, died Tuesday at his home in the Dutch town of Vlodrop, a spokesman said. He was thought to be 91 years old.

"He died peacefully at about 7 p.m.," said Bob Roth, a spokesman for the Transcendental Meditation movement that the Maharishi founded. He said his death appeared to be due to "natural causes, his age."

Once dismissed as hippie mysticism, the Hindu practice of mind control that Maharishi taught, called transcendental meditation, gradually gained medical respectability.

He began teaching TM in 1955 and brought the technique to the United States in 1959.

But the movement really took off after the Beatles visited his ashram in India in 1968, though he had a famous falling out with the rock stars when he discovered them using drugs at his Himalayan retreat.

With the help of celebrity endorsements, Maharishi — a Hindi-language title for Great Seer — parlayed his interpretations of ancient scripture into a multi-million-dollar global empire.

ISRAEL KILLS 8 HAMAS MILITANTS

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip — Israel killed eight Hamas militants Tuesday, firing missiles into the sandy courtyard of a Hamas police station as the Islamic militant group claimed responsibility for a bold strike inside Israel, the first suicide mission in over a year.

The latest round of violence followed two weeks of anarchy on the Gaza-Egypt border that has heightened Israeli concerns that Islamic militants could use the chaos to infiltrate into Israel to carry out attacks.

The last three weeks have seen a succession of violent events — starting with a Hamas rocket barrage on Israel, then a tightened Israeli economic blockade of the territory, and finally a Hamas-engineered border breach with Egypt on Jan. 23 that enabled hundreds of thousands of Gazans to break out.

Israeli security chiefs had warned that Palestinian militants used the breach to slip out of Gaza and sought to make their way from Egypt through the porous 150-mile stretch of mostly unsecured Sinai desert that borders Israel.

Monday's suicide bombing in the Israeli town of Dimona, some 35 miles from the border, set off speculation the assailants used just that method to slip into Israel.

The attack in a Dimona shopping center killed a 73-year-old Israeli woman and wounded 11 people.

U.S. PEACE CORPS HALTS EFFORTS IN KENYA

NAIROBI, Kenya — The U.S. Peace Corps said Tuesday it had temporarily suspended its operations in Kenya following weeks of violence over a disputed election.

While no Peace Corps volunteers have been targeted in the violence that has engulfed Kenya since the Dec. 27 elections, the Washington-based group has decided to pull out its remaining 58 volunteers, said spokeswoman Ama da Beck.

Another 144 volunteers were sent home in January after the violence first erupted, she said.

SUNNIS MAKE NEW CLAIM U.S. KILLED CIVILIANS

BAGHDAD — The U.S. military faced complaints Tuesday from its Sunni allies over claims that more civilians had been killed by American forces — amplifying tensions as the Pentagon tries to calm anger over an airstrike last week that claimed innocent lives.

The disputes have further strained ties with anti-al-Qaida fighters considered crucial in turning the tide against extremist violence.

The latest deaths occurred when U.S. soldiers — acting on tips — stormed a squat, mud-brick house in the village of Adwar, 10 miles south of Saddam Hussein's hometown of Tikrit.

The predominantly Sunni area is home to many former members of Saddam's regime and has been the frequent site of American raids.

The U.S. military said a gunbattle broke out after the troops came under small-arms fire by two suspected terrorists.

It acknowledged a woman was killed and a child was wounded but said it was not clear who shot them.

Two other men were killed and the military described them as insurgents.

Bakery Science Club raises trip money

Members of the Bakery Science Club are working to raise money for an annual trip to Chicago. The club, which has been in existence since the 1970s and is run by grain science students, continues to attract students because they love eating cookies.

Megan Leonard, club president and senior in bakery science and management, said this club helps people in the major get familiar with equipment used in the industry and also gives them first-hand experience baking different types of recipes.

The club meets at 5 p.m. every Tuesday at Schellenberger Hall's baking lab in Room 110. The club makes three types of cookies and sells its products Wednesday from 3 to 5 p.m. in Schellenberger.

"People join this club because they get to eat the cookies we bake," Leonard said. "It is also a time to hang with friends and meet other people."

Leonard said she thinks the friends people make in this group will last a lifetime, and they will be able to network with these people in the future.

Making connections and making friends were two reasons Christina Clariday, club vice president and senior in bakery science and management, said she became interested in the Bakery Science Club.

As vice president, she said she does a lot of supervising and encourages people to stay involved with the club.

Aside from baking every Tuesday, the club goes to Chicago every year for a conference, where members learn about new baking equipment, and suppliers of companies show their new innovations.

"While in Chicago, the group gets to network for people in the industry and has free time to do sightseeing," Clariday said.

Clariday said most club members get to go to Chicago if they complete the 80-hour work requirement and receive 10 points for cleaning.

"We had people join late and have half their hours done — it is not that difficult to get them complete," Clariday said.

Angela Dodd, club secretary and senior in food science, said the opportunity to travel was one of the reasons she joined the Bakery Science Club.

Dodd said she had taken classes at Schellenberger Hall and became introduced to the club.

"I fell in love with it and the people involved," Dodd said.

Though she is not a Bakery Science major, she said it is nice to learn something new every meeting. Also, she said the club needs a wide range of different majors.

"Though I have taken bakery science I and II and learned through the textbook, here you get another perspective to what the industry has to offer," Dodd said.

She said people should try to get involved in this club because there is the opportunity to learn about the industry.

"I think this is a wonderful organization that many students should look into, and it offers many opportunities to look in the food industry by getting first-hand experience," Dodd said.

Smooth refreshment

Relaxing drink helps immune system, mind

By Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Served hot or cold, green tea can be used as a drink to relax the body, and it contains chemical properties that are healthy for the body as well.

Mark Haub, associate professor and assistant department head of human nutrition, said green tea is healthier than other teas.

"Green tea has the potential to combat illnesses and is an easy way to increase antioxidants in the body," Haub said.

Like exercising, drinking green tea should be done frequently to reap the benefits it can provide.

Haub said consumers need to know that flavored green tea doesn't have as many antioxidants as pure green tea.

"The best form of green tea is pure green tea, but pure green tea is usually not chosen," Haub said.

Green tea, in any form, is healthy for the body, Haub said. Green tea drinkers should know if they soak tea bags in hot water for a long time, they will receive a greater concentration of antioxidants.

Haub said many people tend to not brew their tea long enough to receive a high amount of antioxidants.

Tea Drops, in Kansas City, Mo., provides its customers with a variety of green teas.

Chloe Schempf, Tea Drops employee, said green tea has many vitamins and minerals that enhance the immune system, preventing illnesses.

Vitamins in green tea include C, E, F, P, U, and B1, 2 and 3.

It also contains various minerals and amino acids, which are building blocks for cells.

"Green tea has polyphenols, which is a natural chemical found in plants that has antioxidants," Schempf said. "Antioxidants help cure the body from free radicals, cancer, anti-aging, allergies and bad breath."

Green tea, Schempf said, can destroy the bacteria in a person's throat and mouth that can cause bad breath.

Flavonoids in green tea also are helpful in strengthening bones.

Schempf said weight loss is one reason many people tend to drink green tea. Drinking the tea increases metabolism, which burns fat.

"A cup with each meal will increase the metabolic stimulus to burn fat," Schempf said.

Green tea also has been found to help HIV patients by reducing some risk and slowing down the spread of the virus. Though green tea is helpful in fighting the virus, Schempf said people need to be aware it is not a cure for HIV.

"Green tea is obviously really good for you," Schempf said.

Within the Tea Drops store, green tea is among the many teas offered, Schempf said.

The most popular, Japanese cherry Sencha, is what the Japanese refer to as green tea.

Customers also have the option of buying tea in bulk, which are sold in one-, two- and six-ounce containers.

People's Grocery Cooperative employee Cammie Lehman said the store sells a variety of green teas and even sells organic green tea.

Among the many flavors are raspberry, strawberry, mint and green tea with ginger. Green teas come in tea bags and bulk size.

Raspberry-flavored green tea is one of the most popular flavors purchased, she said.

Lehman said instead of drinking coffee in the morning, which is high in caffeine, some prefer to drink green tea because it has less caffeine than coffee but more than herbal tea.

"Green tea is a popular item in all stores just because it has a lot of antioxidants and is healthy," Lehman said.

KING'S KITCHEN

Toast with a kick offers alternative meal during breaks

Relaxation is a word that hardly fits in my vocabulary. With daily pressures of work, life and school, I typically stay up late and get up early. However, for one week a year, I put on the brakes.

Every year, I spend a week of R&R down at the Lake of the Ozarks. While on vacation, I attempt to squeeze in a few rounds of golf, but most days start around 10 a.m. With a cooler of beer, tanning oil and a few good books, I spend most of my days basking in the sun.

Though the trip takes place annually in the middle of July, we always have had one day of rain or strong cloud cover that inhibits the ability to work on a tan. On this day, I drive a few miles to one of my favorite local restaurants.

A cozy little eatery that transports a patron from the Ozark hills to the Napa Valley, it mixes flavors of mid-Missouri with those of the wine country. With a bottomless cup of coffee, it's easy to let the time pass.

One such morning, I decided to try a new menu item — Banana Foster French Toast. The flavors were absolutely amazing, so I asked for the recipe. Similar to all fine restaurants, the management smiled and said it could not give the recipe away.

Not discouraged by the word "no," I set off on my own quest to develop a similar recipe, and a few months ago, I perfected it.

FLAMING MONKEY FRENCH TOAST

INGREDIENTS:

4 eggs
1 teaspoon sugar
1/8 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 teaspoon salt
1 loaf of sourdough bread, cut into eight 1-inch slices

DIRECTIONS:

Crack eggs and place in pie dish. Add sugar, vanilla and salt, then whisk together until well blended; set aside for later use.

In large skillet, melt stick of butter over medium to high heat. Once melted, add brown sugar and stir until thoroughly mixed. If using a nonstick skillet, be careful not to use metal utensils to stir. Metal whisks can scratch nonstick finish and cause pieces of Teflon to come off in the food.

While butter is melting, coat bread in egg mixture and place on griddle to cook both sides until golden brown. When done, place two slices of cooked French toast on each plate.

Once butter and brown sugar are mixed

1 stick of butter
1/2 cup brown sugar
4 bananas, peeled and cut length-wise
1/4 cup Bacardi 151
Powdered sugar (optional)

together, add banana halves and cook until caramelized.

After bananas have been cooking for two minutes, add Bacardi 151. If cooking on a gas stove, remove from heat before adding Bacardi 151. Keep mixture away from open flame until ready to ignite. With a barbecue grill lighter, light liquor on fire. Warning: The flames can be up to two feet in height. Be sure to have enough clearance to not set an apartment or house on fire.

Once flames have dissipated, place two banana halves on top of each set of French toast. Pour caramelized butter and brown sugar mixture atop bananas. Sprinkle with powdered sugar if desired, and serve immediately.

Broadway spoof show to travel to McCain Auditorium

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

No Broadway production is safe from spoofing when "Forbidden Broadway," the latest event in the McCain Performance Series, comes to town Friday.

The production is a musical comedy revue, featuring songs from many popular Broadway shows, past and present, and those classic tunes will be parodied in the name of comedy.

The show, which has been running on Broadway for more than 20 years, has its own production company that handles touring.

Thom Jackson, assistant director of McCain Auditorium, said the group takes part in a six-week tour and then performs on Broadway for about eight weeks.

Jackson said the production involves taking lyrics from a musical and changing them to fit a theme or idea from another musical.

For example, Harvey Fierstein, an actor who played the role of Tevye in "Fiddler On The Roof" on Broadway also won a Tony for playing Edna Turnblad in "Hairspray." In this production of "Forbidden Broadway," the actor, who plays both roles will be dressed in Edna Turnblad's dress with Tevye's beard.

"[The actor] ends up doing a medley of 'Tradition' with a number from 'Hairspray,'" Jackson said. "You kind of end up with a slapstick comedy thing."

Jackson also said the production does not follow a plot and can be best described as a variety show.

Tickets are $15 for K-State students and children, $28 for senior citizens, K-State faculty and military, and $30 for the general public. The show will be in town only on Friday.

CAUCUS | Clinton, Obama split votes nationally

Obama supporters was not the only group surprised with the turnout; the Riley County Democratic Party also was expecting almost as much as half of the actual turnout.

Steve Smethers, the vice chair of the Riley County Democratic Party, said he was expecting about 500 people to show, but was still prepared for the unexpected turnout.

"We had no way to forecast the turnout," Smethers said. "Going in, we had plenty of volunteers, but I think we're going OK."

Smethers also said he expected that more people would have shown up if not for the poor weather.

Aaron Apel, president of the K-State Young Democrats and volunteer at the caucus, said the party estimated that more than half of the caucus voters were students, most of which voted for Obama.

"I think a lot of that has to do with the way that Obama runs his campaign," Apel said.

"He energizes people, and he's speaking to a crowd that historically doesn't vote. He's doing something that politicians have been trying to do for years."

The Kansas Democratic Caucus was part of what is known as Super Tuesday, with almost half of the delegates for Democratic and Republican presidential candidates being determined.

According to CNN.com, Obama pinned down a win in Kansas early in the counting process, but Obama and Clinton split many of the other state caucuses and primaries.

Cox, Schrum and Apel all said the turnout and the success of the caucus will provide momentum toward the national election in November.

Cox volunteered for the Iowa caucus in early January and used the following quote from a campaign leader for Obama in Iowa emphasizing the campaign's goal to continue its success: "Today we won. We won today. Tomorrow's another day."

Schrum said she expected other Senate districts in Kansas and other states would show more support.

"[The Clintons] know how to do it," she said. "...I know what economy is, and a lot of these young kids over here don't begin to know."

Joe Aistrup, head of the Political Science Department at K-State, said the Kansas caucus was much different than past caucuses because it actually mattered in the Democratic presidential race.

"All I can say is that most caucuses in the state of Kansas are not very meaningful, because by the time it gets around to Kansas, usually the decision is already made," Aistrup said.

Aistrup said he expects the Democratic presidential race to extend to the next round of caucuses and primaries and maybe to the Democratic National Convention in late August in Denver because of the closeness of the race.

The Republican caucus in the 22nd Senate district will be at 10 a.m. Saturday at Pottorf Hall in CCo Park. Aistrup said the Republican caucus might not have as much influence on the race because Arizona Sen. John McCain could wrap up the nomination before Saturday.

ASH | Lent season ends Easter Sunday

fish.

Vincent Hofer, senior in international agriculture business, also has attended St. Isidore's for four years and takes mealtime sacrifice one step further by forgoing one meal each week.

"What I usually do is give up one meal a week, and I take the money that I would have spent on that meal and give it to some sort of charity around the world," Hofer said. "For some people, they like to give up an hour of TV, but if they exchange that with surfing the Internet, it's done them no good. When we're little, we give up candy, and every time we think of candy, we think of Lent and our relationship with God. It refreshes my memory of what Lent is all about by giving up that meal one day a week."

Some of the actions associated with Lent include fasting, praying and giving, Hofer said, explaining these actions encompass what it means to be true to God and one's faith.

St. Isidore's offers several participatory options during the time of Lent. Weber said the church holds special retreats, Bible studies and classes as well as mass. The church's usual Sunday services also will focus on repentance.

"There is also the communal penance that we all do as a church," Weber said. "It is something very simple, yet it is something that, when we all do it together, it helps us build a sense of community and discipline in our lives."

The key to being successful during Lent is discipline. Not only must individuals discipline themselves to avoid whatever they have decided to give up, but they must also discipline themselves to create a renewed relationship with the Lord, Weber said.

"What I would recommend is that a person would pick one thing that they really need to work on in their spiritual lives and then pick something they can do during this 40 days," Weber said. "People who are new to Lent try to focus on a variety of activities, but obviously if we pick too much then we get burnt out. If we pick one thing and really focus on it for 40 days, it can really help us grow spiritually."

The 40 days of sacrifice are meant to leave participants with a newfound appreciation for their faith.

"I guess at the very heart of it all is that the things that I indulge in on a basis that is too often are the things that are taking me away from God," Kennedy said. "Hopefully that will reconnect me with my faith."

The Lenten ceremonies conclude during Easter weekend and the celebration of Christ's resurrection.

"When we do something that's difficult to do, it reminds us of how Jesus went the extra mile for us, how Jesus went through some very difficult times for us, for our salvation," Weber said. "It helps us understand a little bit more what Jesus went through."

was one of the recipients of the Hero Award. Ornelas was nominated anonymously by a faculty member.

"It came as a surprise to me," Ornelas said about the award. "I didn't know that I was being nominated."

Ornelas said his work with the Developing Scholars program was an important part of his academic development.

"With Developing Scholars, I've been given the opportunity to work with a professor in the kinesiology department doing undergraduate research," he said. "The last two years I've presented research at the Developing Scholars final presentation. The first year we received best in show."

Ornelas' nominator said his academic accomplishments are even more impressive considering his extracurricular involvement.

Ornelas serves as scholarship chairman of Sigma Lambda Beta, a Latino fraternity, and was instrumental in establishing a new scholarship by raising funds and leading a letter-writing campaign.

"We established a scholarship called the Latino Immigrant Scholarship," Ornelas said. "We've been lobbying for immigrant rights and working really hard on these issues."

Ornelas is also a member of Golden Key Honorary, Phi Kappa Phi Honor Society, Multicultural Student Honor Society and McNair Scholars. He volunteers at the Wonder Workshop and serves as a sergeant in the National Guard.

His nominator stated in her nomination that Ornelas received notice he was being deployed to Iraq, but because of his level of excellence in leadership, his colonel decided to defer his deployment so he could go to medical school after graduation.

ter graduation.

"His colonel wrote, 'He is a good soldier with great potential for service to his community and country ... At this point, I believe it is the best interest of the Kansas Guard to continue to support his studies while he retains his membership in the Guard,'" the nominator wrote.

Ornelas said he plans to graduate in May, pursue a master's degree in public health and eventually apply to medical school — something he said seemed impossible before he came to K-State.

"I never thought of going to medical school until a lot of my professors encouraged me," he said. "I thought it was beyond me. My advisers — particularly Anita Cortez [director of the Developing Scholars program] — kept pushing me and saying, 'Hey, you can do this.'"

His nominator described Ornelas as a humble, "unsung hero," always working to improve his environment and empower those around him. But "hero" is a term Ornelas is hesitant to use.

"I don't feel like I've been doing much," Ornelas said. "I know a lot of students who are working just as hard at K-State — or maybe harder."

Students and faculty can make nominations for the next round of Hero Awards beginning March 1 on the foundation Web site. The process begins again this spring with donations received in the second-annual K-State PROUD campaign.

Tryon said the campaign offers students a chance to make a difference.

"K-State PROUD gives you the ability to help out your fellow students — to keep them in school, working toward a dream," he said. "That's a fantastic reason to get involved with this campaign."

and ESPN and Fox both having tournaments. It's really become a big deal."

Herrman said it is hard to support a large team because of how difficult it is to find students with boats.

"Obviously, when you're in college, a lot of people don't own a big bass boat," he said. "But it is also cool because if you don't, then it's a great opportunity to go out on water with people who do."

Smith said the team offers great opportunities and has a lot of support. Chapman Creek Fly and Tackle in Chapman, Kan., has been an important supporter of the team.

Blake Young's career rises to the top

Court general

Young's emotional play leads to crucial minutes

By Joe Bergkamp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Few who watch senior guard Blake Young would be able to say he does not play with heart and emotion. He plays the role of the court general on defense and offensively he knows his place as well.

"There are times where I might be open, but I know we can get an even better look. I just try to get the ball to the best possible place to score from," Young said.

During his first season with the Wildcats, Young was forced to play out of position for many of the minutes he logged last year. After finally returning to his natural off-guard position, Young has stepped in and played like the type of basketball player former K-State head coach Bob Huggins recruited. Only he and freshman Michael Beasley have started all 20 games this season.

He also plays with the intensity that only a few other Big 12 Conference players can rival. The all-out hustle Young brings to the team might appear to be less refined than others, but when you look at where he came from, it fits. As reported by GoPowercat.com in November, Young was — to a degree — saved by the game of basketball.

His high school coach Kevin Love pulled him off the Orlando, Fla., streets and introduced him to Midnight Madness, a type of basketball camp designed to keep youth off the streets. Young still has a deep relationship with his Oak Ridge high school coach, and they still talk nearly every day. The player-coach relationship is mutual, as Love is no stranger to Bramlage Coliseum.

While coach Love is responsible for helping to mold Young into the player he is today, fans can credit Huggins for bringing Young to Manhattan from Daytona Beach Community College. After Huggins' departure following the 2006-07 season, Young said he understood the move.

"I know it was a tough decision for him to leave everyone he brought here, but there's nothing like being able to go back home," he said. "It was a life-long goal for him, and it wouldn't be like him to not achieve his goals."

Huggins might have left K-State for West Virginia, but he left behind a talented freshman class, which Young said he has been thrilled to be able to play with.

"It's been so much fun, on and off the court. I'm so blessed to get to know these guys," he said. "Everyone has such a great personality on this team. I'm just so blessed to be in this position."

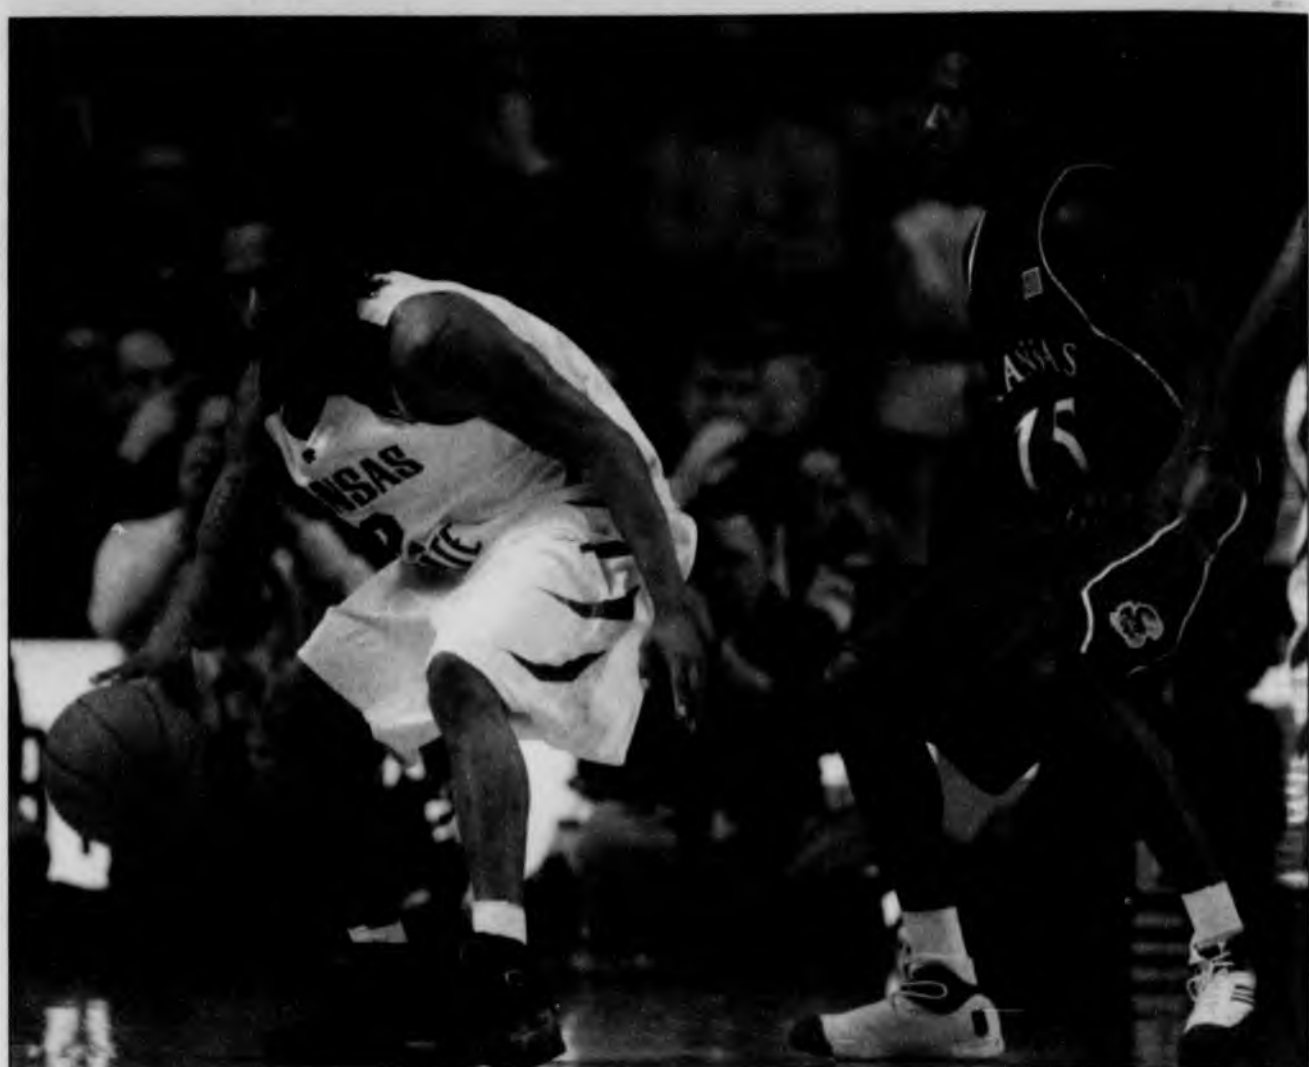

Being one of only three seniors on the squad has given Young an increased role of leadership playing with a group of such gifted freshmen.

"I feel it's my job to let these young guys know how the game is going to be played, but these guys are smart — they pick everything up quick and we go from there," he said. "I pretty much do all the talking on defense, and Clent [Stewart] controls the game and the talking on offense."

Mentoring freshmen might not have been what Young signed up for initially, but it's certainly a role he has had success with. So far this season, Young has either led or been tied for the lead in four separate team-statistical categories, including three-point-shots made, assists, rebounds and steals. His five-assist and zero-turnover performance against Kansas this past Wednesday — a game in which he also received stitches because of a collision with Kansas' senior guard Russell Robinson — speaks volumes to the attitude he brings to the team.

Back in his original role of the off-guard, Young might have taken on an even more important position as a role-model this season for the freshmen players to feed off.

"The energy I play with is what I want to bring to the team," he said. "I want to get every loose ball. I want to get every rebound, take charges and block every shot. I'm going to practice hard every day, and hopefully these young guys learn from that."

The two years Young has donned the purple-and-white jersey have forced him to play a number of roles, but when it all boils down, there is just one goal on Young's mind.

"You can't rely on scoring all the time," he said. "If I score a lot that's fine, but even if I'm not scoring, I enjoy doing the other things. Whatever it takes to win, that's the role I want to play."

At right: Senior guard Blake Young is treated by the medical staff during the KU game. Young was elbowed in the face by KU's Russell Robinson and received stitches following the game.

Young team needs to handle success

History never ceases to repeat itself. Three years ago, it was Connecticut. Two years ago, it was KU. Last year, it was Texas.

Every year, there seems to be a young team who enjoys success during the regular season, and then makes an early exit in the NCAA Tournament. If K-State (15-5, 5-1 Big 12 Conference) is not careful, it might very well be the next team on this list.

Saturday's loss at Missouri (13-9, 3-4 Big 12) was not by any stretch of the imagination a fluke. I'll be the first to admit I wasn't at all shocked by the way the Wildcats played. Freshman forward Michael Beasley's postgame interview said it all. He admitted he and his teammates thought the Tigers would give up, and the Wildcats stopped playing hard. I guess we can all praise him for his honesty.

There is a fine line between being confident and being arrogant. If the young Wildcats plan on making a run deep in the NCAA Tournament, they need to be able to make the distinction between the two.

There is no doubt there is a phenomenal combination of talent and athleticism among this young Wildcat squad. If basketball was simply an athletic competition, the Wildcats would be one of the best teams in college basketball. But it's not just an athletic competition. Basketball is as much cerebral as it is physical. Every one must mentally be in the game for 40 minutes, especially during Big 12 Conference and NCAA Tournament play.

It is not a coincidence that young teams don't win championships very often. Many times, young players and teams suffer mental miscues. Often, these can be the difference between winning and losing.

NBA all-star Chris Webber's timeout is considered by many to be one of the most infamous mental blunders in basketball history. In the 1993 NCAA Championship game with his Michigan team, down two points to North Carolina, the sophomore forward grabbed a rebound off of a missed free throw. As the clock counted down from 19 seconds, he quickly dribbled down the court, stopped in the corner and called a timeout. The problem was his team didn't have any timeouts remaining. He was charged with a technical foul, and North Carolina won the game. His lack of focus cost his team a possible national championship.

I'm not saying the Wildcats will make the same mistakes Webber did. I'm just saying younger players are more prone to suffering mental lapses during games. It's happened several times this year to the Wildcats.

This season has been a learning process for the Wildcats. Losing to the Tigers was a good jolt for this team. Coming off emotional wins against Oklahoma, Texas A&M and KU, it is easy to see how a young team's confidence can boil over to the point of being borderline arrogant. That is when mistakes are more likely to happen.

I believe in coach Frank Martin's ability to take this loss and use it as a teaching tool. I have faith in K-State's freshmen to take Martin's lessons and apply them in future situations.

I have faith that this team will combine its talent and mental ability to make a deep run in the NCAA Tournament this year.

Residents voice concern with development

By Brandi Brumback
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Public feelings about the downtown redevelopment project in Manhattan have been mixed. Since the revelation that Hy-Vee and other big name retailers would be a central part of the plan, those feelings have leaned towards dissatisfaction in several cases.

There are a variety of reasons why the final plan for the north end of the project has not met citizen expectations.

City Commissioner Jim Sherow said the largest oppositions have stemmed from concern for diminishment of original architectural design concepts, caliber of retail being established, and expectations of how the project would connect to Poyntz Avenue downtown.

In some cases, people said they thought there was a drastic difference between what was originally presented to the community and what has become a reality.

Sherow said they expected new retail that would add to the area — not replicate what was already in place in Manhattan. There are four grocery stores located in close proximity to Hy-Vee's future location.

"Part of the impression that we're not getting the stores we wanted is fair, but we're not done yet," said City Commissioner Bruce Snead.

Certain retailers that originally expressed interest in being part of the redevelopment decided to pass on the Manhattan area.

Snead said there could be many reasons for this. Some retailers decide against opening in midsize markets like Manhattan's or are simply not interested in expanding at all.

"We're out here in the middle of nowhere, and national chains understand that the numbers don't materialize here like they do in a metropolitan area," said Bernie Hayen, director of city finance.

This change of heart could also be attributed to changing financial conditions over the period of time that has passed since the initial interest.

Because of time constraints involving eminent domain, planning had to be done around retailers who were definitely interested in north end inclusion. That means developers cannot wait around for interested retailers the community will immediately approve.

Tax revenue from north end retailers will fund the south end of the project. Expected retailers include large chains like PETCO, Bed Bath & Beyond, Hy-Vee and OfficeMax.

Shops people expected are not the first to come, Snead said. He said they often do not arrive until larger businesses commit and they can predict what kind of customers will come to the area. Smaller-scale stores

'Protect your Willie' T-shirts sold out

By Yvonne Ramirez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The infamous "Protect your Willie" shirts sold by Sexual Health Awareness Peer Educators have sold out.

Prior to the Collegian article printed Jan. 31, Annisa Shockey, senior in biology and president of SHAPE, said 75 to 80 of the T-shirts were left. The same day all the shirts were purchased.

New SHAPE shirts will be black with a basketball, and white lettering on the front will state "Don't be forward with your Willie, guard it!" The back will have a basketball court with a chalkboard having x's and o's representing the players. Currently, the organization has pre-ordered 25 shirts, and those who want shirts have to pre-order.

"I still have people asking me where they can buy 'Protect your Willie' shirts," Shockey said.

Carol Kennedy, director of health promotion at Lafene and SHAPE adviser, said the organization is not authorized to print any new "Protect your Willie" shirts with the K-State Wildcat logo.

The organization has not decided if it will publicly sell their shirts like the "Protect your Willie" shirts were sold.

"We want to wear them as an organization first and see the response of our peers before we decide to order more for sale," Shockey said.

Lafene treats 2,000 cases of flu in past few weeks

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's Lafene Health Center has seen unusual traffic with almost 2,000 students with flu symptoms and upper respiratory illnesses during the past three weeks.

"The flu has been in the Manhattan community for a couple of weeks now, and it has been found in the KSU student population," said Theresa Doyle, health educator in health promotion and nutrition counseling at Lafene. Doyle also said the number of students who have visited Lafene for flu symptoms is an estimate produced by Lafene's General Clinic.

Because of the influx of patients, those who had an urgent medical need that could not wait were seen first by a Triage nurse, then scheduled an appointment as needed, Doyle added.

Kansas is one of 11 states where influenza is widespread, according to the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

People are still being urged to get their flu shot, and there's plenty available, Dr. Julie Gerberding, head of the CDC, told the Associated Press. So far, the majority of flu cases are being caused by strains that are a good match to the vaccine, which should provide some

Facilities staff maintains grounds to prepare for classes

By Monica Castro
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

While some Manhattan residents were still warm in their beds, the staff at K-State Division of Facilities was up clearing snow on campus.

Ed Heptig, director of facilities maintenance, said after a staff meeting on Tuesday they planned to reconvene in the morning to help make campus manageable for travel.

There were also staff members who remained on campus to help remove the growing snow patches on campus Tuesday night. Custodial staff members also arrived on campus at 4 a.m. to help clean entrances to buildings, he said.

"There was trouble getting around, but that is part of their job," Heptig said. "But they keep the campus running."

Heptig said the staff always is prepared for snow days and works hard to maintain the roads, walks and entrances to buildings on campus.

"[Facilities] do a good job when we rely on them," Heptig said. "They have dedications and respond well when things need to be done."

In the streets of Manhattan, the roads were cleaned frequently to prevent road hazards.

"We treat the streets as soon as we see snow accumulating," said Jeff Walters, public works superintendent.

However, most schools in Manhattan and the surrounding areas were closed because of the roads — except K-State, according to a closed-school listing on the KMAN-AM 1350 Web site.

The streets also were monitored regularly to make sure they were safe for Manhattan residents, Walters said.

Riley County Police Department Lt. Kurt Moldrup said since 7 p.m. Tuesday, there were 26 different traffic-related incidents from cars that got stuck in the snow or had an accident. He said there were no people injured in the accidents. He also said the roads were maintained, and people were driving cautiously around town.

Eric Tabaka, sophomore in bakery science and management, said he thought campus was pretty easy to get around and did not have to struggle much from class to class.

"I think that it was good we had class because it was not that dangerous outside," Tabaka said.

Manhattan school board votes on summer school programs

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Inclement weather caused Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school closings on Wednesday, but Board of Education members still had their biweekly meeting.

During its second reading, board members revisited an elementary school summer program proposal. However, after three separate motions, the proposal will remain tabled another two weeks.

The proposal had two summer school location options for members' consideration — Projected Option One for 2008 would provide summer school at four Manhattan elementary schools for about 175 students and one Ogden elementary school for about 100 students. The option's expenditures would total $271,100 and would use revenue from special education, summer school and at-risk funds. At-risk funds include $225,000 designated for 2008 summer school programs.

Projected Option Two for 2008 asked members to consider three Manhattan elementary schools with an average enrollment of 230 students and one Ogden elementary school for about 100 students. Its expenditures would total $267,200.

Students would be required to attend summer school based on spring Measures of Academic Progress scores, spring state assessment scores, failing grades or below grade-level performance in reading and mathematics, according to the proposal's criteria for selection.

Board member Walt Pesaresi voted against the proposal. Since his election to the board in 2001, Pesaresi said he has asked to see a correlation among students' summer school attendance and their grades each year, but he has yet to see the data.

"I think spending over a quarter of a million dollars — that's a lot of money to me — that's a lot of tax

WEIRD NEWS

AUTHORITIES CRACK DOWN ON CARELESS DRIVERS

MONTERREY, Mexico (Reuters) — Motorists in northern Mexico who are caught dabbling on lipstick, shaving or carrying a pet at the wheel will now face hefty fines as authorities try to cut down on traffic accidents.

Putting on make-up or shaving with an electric razor will cost drivers up to 346 pesos ($32) in the northern Mexican city of Torreón from this month, Mexican media reported on Saturday.

City halls across Mexico are stiffening traffic laws as motorists in Mexico regularly ignore stop lights, drive drunk or with children in the front seat, and carry passengers in the back of pick-up trucks. Fatal accidents are common.

SCIENTISTS MAKE PAPER PLANES FOR SPACE

KASHIWA CITY, Japan (Reuters) — A spacecraft made of folded paper zooming through the skies might sound far-fetched, but Japanese scientists plan to launch paper planes from the International Space Station to see if they make it back to Earth.

On Wednesday the University of Tokyo researchers tested small, origami planes made of special paper for 30 seconds in 250 degrees Celsius heat and wind at seven times the speed of sound. The planes survived the wind tunnel test intact.

The theory is that paper craft, being much lighter than space shuttles, might escape the worst of the friction and heat that much heavier space shuttles face on re-entry to the atmosphere.

LONDONERS SHOULD KEEP TORTOISES IN THE FRIDGE FOR WINTER

LONDON (Reuters) — Warm winters might be rousing hibernating pet tortoises early and endangering their lives but there is a solution, experts say — keep them in the fridge through the winter.

Tortoise experts said unseasonably warm weather has woken many of the reptiles early, leaving their owners needing to keep them warm through any new cold snaps that could kill them.

"The fridge is an ideal method and a proven way of being safe in a changing climate," said Joy Bloor, owner of one of country's largest sanctuaries, the Tortoise Garden in Cornwall, where dozens of tortoises have woken early this year.

"It is becoming a more popular method definitely."

Tortoises hibernate through the winter but need to keep their body temperature between 3 and 5 degrees Celsius.

If it rises above that, they wake up, begin digesting food and will die if the temperature falls again.

University for Mankind, also known as UFM, was founded in 1968 by K-State student activists and faculty to achieve better communication between the campus and the Manhattan community.

This year the nonprofit organization celebrates its 40th anniversary and offers many events like demonstrations and mini-classes this spring.

UFM's education program serves the K-State, Manhattan and Salina communities and allows for an interesting role-reversal: Students can give lessons to their professors or teach each other.

The motto of the UFM Learning Center is "everyone can learn, everyone can teach."

"The youngest instructor was 6 years old. She taught how to take care for rabbits, and a 12-year-old did a slideshow about a night sky," said Linda Teener, UFM executive director. "The oldest one was 98, and he was giving lessons about healthy living."

Though people of all ages participate, college students and young adults teach the majority of lessons, Teener said. Valuable teaching experience and skills of working with public are good things to put on one's résumé.

Those who want to teach a class that is already offered or have been an instructor on a regular basis are encouraged to speak to the UFM Education Coordinator about ways they can still teach, she said.

Students can log onto the UFM Web site at www.tryufm.org to get a listing of sessions.

Teener said taking UFM courses is a great way to learn something practical like managing money or getting rid of clutter according to feng shui rules or even getting involved in sports activities or helping the environment, Teener said. Some new classes this semester are Introduction to Flying, Partner Yoga, Jazz for Adults and Children, and Soap Making. Another class, in which people will learn how to become a radio news reporter, is starting soon, Teener said.

Fifty of the courses offer K-State credit. The swimming program has been offered for 16 years, and ballroom dance, golf, Tae Kwon Do have been offered for a long time as well, Teener said.

"The nice thing about UFM is that a lot of our classes are very short," Teener said. "Some of them are only one time as Friday Night Out. It can be a nice break from a schedule and you can learn something, relax and have a different type of the atmosphere than in usual classes."

One of the most popular classes is Community CPR and First Aid. "So many K-State students need the class before they can do the student teaching, so we are trying to find new ways to offer additional sections," Teener said. "We try to do it online. Students need come in only to test actual hands-on, because you need to demonstrate the skills."

Students who are interested in learning another language can choose from Spanish, Arabic, Russian, French or conversational sign language.

Sorkel Kadir, instructor of the Elementary Arabic class, said her class gives fundamental skills of standard Arabic speaking, writing and reading.

"Arabic is becoming very important in the world right now. Classes will be not difficult at all," Kadir said. "If people with different levels of knowledge sign up, we will separate them in different groups."

Students can sign up any time until the class starts, she said.

Those who enrolled in the first Belly Dance class at the International Student Center said they signed up for different reasons.

"I came mostly for fitness and also hoped it would be fun," said Jessica Dworshak, junior in food science.

Rochelle Doctolero, Manhattan resident, said she wanted to learn a new dance.

"I saw this dance but never did it before, so I want to learn some moves," she said.

Student Senate to extend Thanksgiving break to a week, remove 1-day fall break

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thanksgiving break might be a week long in 2010 depending on how Student Senate votes in its meeting tonight.

The legislation will remove the one-day fall break to create the slightly longer break during the week of Thanksgiving, according to the agenda.

Student Body Vice President Lydia Peele commented on the legislation last week. She explained that the longer break would make sense for a lot of students for travel purposes.

Oklahoma State University will send delegates to attend tonight's meeting to examine K-State's Student Senate proceedings, said Nick Piper, Student Senate chair, in an e-mail to Student Senators.

Also on the agenda are three commendations. Distinguished professor of physics Chris Sorensen was honored with the 2007 National Professor of the Year Award. Distinguished professor of music David Littrell earned the Kansas Professor of the Year award. K-State Hero Award recipients also will be commended by senators.

Senators will vote on whether or not to increase the Student Union Operations Budget Privilege Fee as well.

It will increase the current budget by $10,000 if passed.

A vote will be taken on four allocation items to different student organizations.

Kansas State Collegiate 4-H, KSU Inter-fraternity Council and the KSU Panhellenic Council all requested funds to go on various conference trips.

The KSU Juggling team requested funding to be host to the annual Little Apple Juggling Festival on Feb. 22-24.

Only three new items will be considered on the new legislation category. All of which are allocations to attend conferences.

According to an e-mail sent to student organization leaders, budget request forms are due by 4 p.m. March 7 in the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Student Union.

The forms have to be turned in 28 days before the day of the event.

TO THE POINT

K-State deserved day off

Seventeen schools in northeast Kansas were closed or delayed on Wednesday, according to the Manhattan Mercury.

Four of these were colleges or universities, but K-State ignored mother nature's wrath and plowed through yet another potential snow day.

On days like Wednesday, professors can be heard commenting on low class attendance. They might blame it on the late night caused by Super Tuesday or hope for some other optimistic excuse, but following politics, unfortunately, is rarely a college student's reason to miss class.

Several vehicles got stuck just trying to get out of an apartment parking lot Wednesday morning, but they were still expected to make it to class.

Common sense would suggest K-State administrators should make the decision to close for days like Wednesday for the benefit and safety of students. Some professors might be concerned that students will lose valuable paid-for class time from closings or cancellations, but it's worse for those who physically cannot make it to campus. Not only do they lose class time, but they are then a day behind.

When K-State canceled finals in December, it was because of falling branches, not ice. The next day tests went as scheduled, but branches could still be seen falling all over campus.

K-State has snow days built in to its schedule. A break here and there would be great, but based on trends in past years, snow days probably aren't in K-State's future.

Young voters' interest critical to future

By Jessica Hensley
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

"I'm not planning to vote — I'm not that interested in politics."

This is a common sentiment among college students and has been since the early 1970s. It is easy to be blasé about politics in college — after all, who cares what Congress is doing when it's the Stuni guy's birthday? But we live in a democracy, which means we succeed or fail based upon the decisions made by the masses. The right to have a say in those decisions shouldn't be dismissed lightly.

According to a poll conducted by USA Today, there are three main reasons college students don't vote. They don't know, they don't care and they don't have the time to either know or care.

When asked why she didn't participate in the last election, one poll participant replied, "I don't know, it sounded kind of intimidating — going into a booth and pressing buttons ... I don't even know when I can vote. Is it the first week of September?"

Another participant in the same poll replied, "I don't care. I don't care enough to care about why I don't care."

During past three decades there has been a steady decline in young voter turnout since the 26th Amendment lowered the voting age to 18 in 1971. According to data collected by the Youth Vote Coalition, there are 42,834,082 U.S. citizens between the ages of 18 and 30 who are eligible to vote. This age group makes up a full three-fourths of total eligible voters and is the second largest voting demographic. Unfortunately, only 42 percent of eligible 18- to 30-year-olds cast a ballot in the 2004 presidential election. This number is appalling, given that the biggest election issues often directly affect the youth of the nation.

The war in Iraq, education funding, reproductive rights and the right to privacy are just a few of the issues being debated that could affect the quality of life for college students. Voting is by far the most effective and efficient way for citizens to voice their opinions on such issues and when college students don't vote, they effectively give away their ability to have any influence over how these issues play out in the future.

Our government was designed to be by the people and for the people. Unfortunately, this doesn't work without the people. College students potentially could have a huge influence in deciding who will be next to lead our nation — but only if they educate themselves on the issues and go vote. It would be a tragedy for America's youth to allow this opportunity to have a say in the future slip by because they simply couldn't bring themselves to care.

The direction of our nation over the next four years is going to be decided this November whether college students participate or not. By choosing to participate, college students can help to ensure that our country's next leader will reflect their ideas and concerns for the future.

Citizens should consider themselves lucky

By Mark Wampler
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A couple days ago I overheard a couple at a coffee shop discussing why the United States was considered the greatest country in the world.

"Our health care isn't good. Our education has been declining," they said. "What is it about America that is so great?"

I would like to think this nervous couple was just looking for some commonality to talk about, but I've heard it too many times before. So listen to these stories.

Sayad Parvez Kambakhsh is a 23-year-old journalism student at Balkh University in Afghanistan who printed off a paper from the Internet with the aim, he said, of bringing up a debate on an important topic.

The paper, which was not written by Kambakhsh, was written about the idea that Muslim fundamentalists who have claimed the Koran justifies the cruel treatment of women have misinterpreted the views of the Prophet Muhammad. After several students complained, Kambakhsh was charged with blasphemy. He has been sentenced to death.

Erik Mirandette, a state pole-vauling champion from Maryland, and his 18-year-old brother Alex set off to the African country of Morocco to help West African refugees who were abandoned by their governments. After their time in Morocco, the brothers set off on a heroic journey across the continent to meet people and see what they could do to help out among the villages.

After two years and more than 9,000 miles, the brothers arrived in Cairo, Egypt. In April 2005, a day before they were scheduled to fly back home to Maryland, a suicide bomber walked into the crowded market where Erik and his brother Alex were walking and detonated his nail bomb, killing Alex immediately.

According to Kenyan Red Cross officials, more than 200,000 people were displaced and 863 people killed in Kenya in the month of January as a result of what an American diplomat has called "ethnic cleansing." Margaret Njambi, a tailor from the Rift Valley in Kenya, had to flee last week with her four children, taking refuge in a police station after rioters burned her house and her shop.

The United States is certainly not immune to random and senseless acts of violence. The tragic loss of life at Virginia Tech, Westroads Mall in Omaha, Neb., and Youth with a Mission Denver in Denver — are three examples, but these instances are isolated and sporadic.

Tragedies similar to the stories I just recounted happen every day in other countries. When was the last time you watched the news without hearing of the tragic results of a suicide bomber somewhere?

The next time you wonder what is so great about this country, think about how you felt perfectly safe going to the mall last weekend to buy a pair of shoes. Think about how you didn't have to worry about being dragged out of your house while you were watching the Super Bowl as "ethnic cleansing" took place in your neighborhood.

Think about your ability to say whatever you want, wherever you want, without the threat of being sentenced to death by the government.

Remember our soldiers who have made all of this possible, and then remember that what makes the United States so great is the freedom to even ask the question.

Yes, Fourum, could you give me a wake-up call around 7? Thanks.

Thank you, global warming, for all the snow.

Take that, immune system.

When I hear Bill O'Reilly speak, all I can think is, "So, what's your point?"

Question: What is the difference between Matt Combes and a KU student? Answer: There is no difference.

When Blake Young runs, he reminds me of "Predator."

To the person at the rec: Since when do arm bars, chokes and intense pain constitute as foreplay?

Collegian, how can you not list K-State as one of KU's key losses? That's awful.

To the groundskeepers at Kansas State: I'm not angry, I'm just disappointed.

To the guy sitting in front of me: Cover your mouth when you're coughing.

You know how Ugg boots got their name? People were too lazy to keep saying "ugly."

If you're gonna have class, scoop the sidewalks.

I just saw a football player talking on a pink RAZR.

Attention all girls: I'm having an underwear pillow fight at my place tonight, followed by light refreshments.

KU and K-State are not real rivals. Get on with your lives.

To the girl walking around outside with flip-flops on: Can I get some of whatever you're smoking?

Today is Wednesday. I have spent most of the day shoveling, and then my car was stuck when I went to leave, and I want to thank very much two young men who helped get my car out of where it was parked. They were quite a lucky star. Thank you.

Hey, girl in the Lincoln: Scrape the snow off the back of your window. It's kind of making you drive retarded.

If you like KU, you support cheating, homosexuality and terrorism.

The Stuni guy is the best by the devil himself.

My friend and I took the bipolar Kansas weather to Lafene to get its meds regulated. But they told us it wasn't bipolar. It was pregnant.

The safest sex is ear sex.

So we went to Columbia and lost the basketball game this weekend. But I went to Columbia and slept with two Missouri sorority girls. So did we really lose?

Fight the powers that be. Let's take down IFC.

Hey, hot girl from Theta: Come see me.

Yeah, I just about got ran over by a G-Phi. Well, judging from the tramp stamp on the back of her car.

Good vs. Evil

All-female cast to perform story of hardship, triumph

By Eric Davis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Pulitzer Prize-winning production with an all-female cast will debut this weekend in Nichols Theatre.

The cast is smaller than the usual production and contains only women but is not a statement in feminism, said Shannan Osborn, graduate student in speech.

"Effects of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds" is an autobiography written by Paul Zindel, said Mackenzie Goodwin, sophomore in theater. Many of the characters are based on experiences from Zindel's life, said Goodwin, who plays the role of Beatrice in the production.

"I do think the author wrote on a lot of his own experiences, and since he didn't have a male figure, that's why there was none in the play," Osborn said.

The play tells the story of Beatrice, a bitter, lonely woman who lives in her husband's dilapidated vegetable shop. She has two daughters who respond differently to her constant barrage of negativity, Goodwin said.

One of Beatrice's daughters is Ruth, an epileptic floozy, Goodwin said, who is damaged by her mother's actions. Ruth's character stands in stark contrast to Beatrice's other daughter, Tillie, who responds in a different way, turning to science to ease her mind.

From the beginning of the play, Tillie grows the marigolds to satisfy her love of science and uses the flowers to cope with her terrible home life.

By excelling in science and subjecting her marigolds to gamma radiation, Tillie's character shows how people can survive despite extremely negative circumstances, Goodwin said.

One of the attractions of the production is the symbolism and the struggles Tillie encounters as she tries to maintain a level head.

"Tillie is in a really bad situation and is trying to grow up in an environment that is not so healthy," Osborn said. "I think that can relate to almost anyone."

TOP: Beatrice, played by Mackenzie Goodwin, sophomore in theater, spoons honey to Nanny, played by Shannon Osborn, graduate student in speech, during dress rehearsal for "Effects of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds" at Nichols Theatre Wednesday night. BOTTOM LEFT: Beatrice reflects on her childhood as the daughter of a fruit vender. BOTTOM RIGHT: Tillie, played by Meredith Lindsey, sophomore in theater, gives a monologue on the effects of gamma rays on man-in-the-moon marigolds.

The gamma rays created positive and negative effects on the marigolds, killing some, hindering the growth of others and creating wonderful mutations that could change the world, which is symbolic of the way the daughters turn out.

The negative consequences of the radiation can be seen as Ruth, the older sister, is destroyed by the pressure of her mother. Tillie, who thrived despite the constant degradation from her mother, embodies the beautifully mutated flower and shows that good can come from horrible situations.

By the time the curtains are drawn, the symbols become clear. The gamma rays are embodied in the negative actions of the mother and the effects are seen in the daughters.

"It is a very strong show in the sense that it leaves you with something," said Meredith Lindsey, sophomore in theater. "You don't walk out of the theater saying, 'I just saw a play,' you walk out saying, 'I learned something.'"

The cast returned from winter break early to start working on the play on Jan. 6, Goodwin said.

The play will run today through Saturday and Wednesday through Feb. 16 in Nichols Theatre.

ASK THE FIFTH YEAR

Men should look for surprise gift for Valentine's Day sweetheart

Valentine's Day is coming up and I have no idea what to do for my girlfriend. Got any ideas?

Get her a horse. Seriously, who wouldn't love to get a horse? Even if she doesn't like horses or doesn't know how to ride one, she can still just let it hang around the house. Her friends will come over and freak out when they see some beast pass by the window.

"Oh, that," she'll say, "That's just Daren, my horse."

How many people can say that? Who do you know that gets to say, "Oh, shoot, it's going to snow. I better bring the horse in"? No one.

ADAM REICHENBERGER

It's an added bonus if she knows how to ride it. Then she can ride on up to campus, tie it to a bike rack, give it an oat bag and head off to class.

Does K-State have regulations on horses? I see dogs all the time, but is there some clause in the school charter saying no student shall ride a horse to class? Why aren't there more people doing this? If a girl got me a Valentine's horse, I'd ride it to class every day, and when he stares at me with those huge brown eyes as I tie him up, I'd say sternly, "Eat your oats, Daren," and be on my way.

Though, if you're like me, you cannot afford horses for others no matter how significant they might be. And yes, I've asked. But no, people don't let you borrow them.

Valentine's Day can be tricky. First off, celebrate it. I don't want to generalize, but women love to tell you they don't want you to get them anything, or they don't want you to make a big deal of it. "Don't waste your money," they'll say. "It's just another day."

Bologna. What women won't tell you is they also love to sit around one-upping each other with stories about what their boyfriends or husbands did that was oh, so romantic.

Don't be the guy whose girlfriend has to say, "Oh, we don't really like to celebrate Valentine's Day; we're trying to save our money," while all the other girls roll their eyes like Berko in "Empire Records" when Jane reveals she works for Rex Manning, saying "oh" while obviously laughing under their breath.

Everyone knows Valentine's

Day is coming. Every girlfriend and wife is expecting something. Your job is to get around their obvious expectations. Distract them with some flowers and ordinary plans, but remember plans are for mothers.

If you haven't figured it out already, let me tell you: Surprises make the best surprise.

Surprise her with something. You've got to be creative. Be original. Be specific. You've still got a week until the big day, so take some time to listen to her; you'll figure it out.

Discover the things she cares about most — you should already know — and turn it into a gift.

Belichick gets what he, team deserves

Arrogance is defined in the dictionary as an offensive display of superiority or self-importance. I define it in three words: New England Patriots. Nobody was happier seeing the pompous and cocky Patriots fall to the New York Giants last Sunday in Super Bowl XLII than I was. The Patriots got what they deserved.

JONATHAN WRIGHT

That's right. I said it. They deserved to lose. During the NFL playoffs last year, as I watched the Patriots defeat the San Diego Chargers, I told my friend that their arrogance is going to cost them dearly some day.

As some might recall, after the Patriots beat the Chargers in San Diego, many players went to the 50-yard line and mocked the Chargers players by doing their own rendition of linebacker Shawne Merriman's sack dance, nearly starting a brawl.

These are not the same Patriots that elected to be introduced as a team in Super Bowl XXXVI when their opponent, the St. Louis Rams, introduced only its offense. This team had become conceited and classless.

Their omnipotent attitude spilled over into the beginning of the season this past year. During the first game of the season against the New York Jets, a Patriots video man was sent to the Jets' sideline to tape defensive signals. Head coach Bill Belichick's arrogance led him to believe he could get away with such a scam. The NFL confiscated the tape and thus, Spygate was born.

The egotistic attitude of the Patriots didn't stop there. Week in and week out they ran up the score on opponents, making it a priority to win by 20, 30 and sometimes more than 40 points. With each victory, their heads got bigger.

Close victories over the Indianapolis Colts, Philadelphia Eagles, Baltimore Ravens and New York Giants only fueled their egos by making them believe no matter how bad they played, they could still come away with a victory.

A team that was once only about winning had now made it a priority to shatter records and humiliate opponents. They cruised somewhat easily through the playoffs thinking the NFL's second perfect season in history was simply going to fall into their laps.

Then Super Bowl XLII came. From the opening snap, the New York Giants, a team the Patriots beat in the final week of the regular season, set the tone and sent a message to Tom Brady and the Patriots. The Giants were more physical, more dominating and simply better. As the game progressed, it was apparent the Patriots were growing more and more frustrated because the Giants were taking their best punches and

Freshman forward Michael Beasley once again played his way into the record books Wednesday in a 74-59 victory over Nebraska at Bramlage Coliseum.

Beasley's 35-point performance clinched the highest number of 30-point games in a season, a mark previous held by Bob Boozer and Norris Coleman.

Beasley also tallied 13 rebounds, which completed his 18th double-double of the season. The feat tied him in the Wildcat record book with Larry Conley for the most double-doubles in a single season.

"Mike worked his tail off today, defensively and offensively," said K-State coach Frank Martin. "He earned those points he got today. I was real proud of him. He didn't just stand around and watch the game; he worked. He had a guy on him at all times, and he continued to work."

Though the game might have looked like a cake walk for No. 20 K-State (16-5, 6-1 Big 12 Conference), Nebraska was the first to put points on the board, scoring four before K-State went on a 12-0 scoring run, with 10 points from Beasley, to take the lead. The Wildcats would never lose the lead.

K-State went into the locker room at halftime up by 15, but a second-half run sparked by freshman guard Cookie Miller got the Cornhuskers (13-7, 2-5 Big 12) to within five points at the 11:23 mark. However, the duo of Beasley and freshman forward Bill Walker scored 12 unanswered points to seal a K-State victory.

"We started to celebrate early," Beasley said of the Nebraska run. "We were up 15, and we just relaxed, so they started to come back. We can't do that."

Beasley led all scorers. Other K-State players in double-figure scoring were Walker, who had 17 points; and freshman guard Jacob Pullen, who scored 11.

Leading Nebraska in scoring was senior center Aleks Maric, who had 17 points. Junior guard Ade Dagunduro and Miller also scored in double-figures, with 14 each; sophomore guard Sek Henry also scored 11.

Wildcats play on without senior Stewart after mother's death

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State took the court with a different look Wednesday.

The players normal warm-ups were replaced with pink T-shirts donning large white ribbons on the back with the initials "VS" inside.

On the front of the shirts, a white Wildcat sat above the word "Family."

K-State was without two members of the Wildcat family Wednesday night as senior guard Clent Stewart was in Oklahoma after the death of one of the team's biggest fans: his mother Vanessa Stewart.

Vanessa Stewart died Tuesday after a lengthy battle with bone cancer, almost one week after watching K-State beat KU on Jan. 30.

"Clent's mom was one of our biggest supporters," said sophomore guard Chris Merriwether. "I think we definitely had to come out here and try to get a big win for her. I think we were playing for her tonight."

The Wildcats will honor

Vanessa Stewart for the remainder of the season with her initials in a black patch on their jerseys.

K-State coach Frank Martin said Vanessa Stewart's health took a "left turn" over the weekend and Clent Stewart left following the Missouri game to go to his mother in Oklahoma.

Martin said Stewart, who is averaging 7.9 points and 3.2 assists per game for the Wildcats this season, will return to the team when he is ready.

"I've talked extensively with Clent since the day his mom made a left turn and, like I told him, he has to do what his heart tells him to do," Martin said. "Right now, with him, it's not a basketball game; it's life."

Martin said he has had a tough time with his emotions lately, and it has been difficult to see how hard the situation is on Clent Stewart.

"He's crushed," Martin said. "The last three or four days: those are the kinds of days as a basketball coach, as an older person, it's hard to see a grown man struggle the way he is struggling. Those are the days that are difficult for me."

Freshman guard Jacob Pullen made the start for Clent Stewart in Wednesday's contest and finished with 11 points. Martin said it would have been a good shooting night for Stewart.

"His nickname's 'Steady Stew.' That's who he is," he said. "Obviously he would've gotten some wide open looks today and [Stewart] can shoot that open shot."

The team will fly to Norman, Okla., Friday after practice to join Stewart and his family and will return for its 1 p.m. game Saturday against Oklahoma State at Bramlage Coliseum.

"That's a tight-knit family, and they've been fighting that disease along with his mom for awhile, as a whole," Martin said. "We are going to fly down there, and let him know that we're here for him and how important he is to us."

Riley County museum offers glimpse into history of area's development

By Elise Podhajsky
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One step into the Riley County Historical Museum's exhibits and one will be immediately thrown back to the days when American Indians governed the land, settlers were trotting in on horseback and the electric washing machine was an exciting new invention.

Arrowheads, plows, pianos and glassware are sprinkled throughout the county museum. Each belong to one of the three permanent and temporary exhibits, and all give visitors new insight into how Riley County has grown.

"Anyone who is living in an area ought to have some sense of its history," said Linda Glasgow, Riley County Historical Society registrar. "I think [the museum] is a nice place to start."

Museum assistant Sandra Reddish said the Riley County Historical Society was set up in 1914 and has been accumulating documents, photographs, tools and machinery native to the county since then.

The museum has two permanent exhibits, Reddish said — "Household Work Week" and "The Land and the People: The Settlement of Riley County." She said it also offers a temporary exhibit — currently "The Tallgrass Prairie: An American Landscape" — which changes about once every six months.

The temporary exhibit is separate from the permanent two and is a series of panels with pictures and informational narratives that give general information about the Tallgrass Prairie.

"The Land and the People" exhibit begins with photographs and artifacts including moccasins and hand-carved stone tools from the area's first inhabitants, the Kansa tribe. The exhibit goes on to 1855, the year of the area's first settlement, and even displays the original marriage certificate of the first couple wed in the county.

Moving through the exhibit, visitors will find tools used to construct early homes and businesses as well as pharmaceutical instruments and farming equipment, large and small.

"I think that for a newcomer in town, [this exhibit] gives a good background of the history and settlement of Riley county," Glasgow said.

To take a closer look at how past citizens lived from day-to-day, "Household Work Week" displays everything from the first electric refrigerator to stove-top waffle irons to musical instruments. Glasgow said the exhibit allows visitors to have "revelations" about how earlier households were organized.

The exhibit is broken down into days of the week with items displayed for each day's task. Monday is Wash Day, Tuesday is Ironing Day, Wednesday is Sewing Day, Thursday is Calling/Visiting Day, Friday is Cleaning Day, Saturday is Kitchen/Cleaning Day and Sunday is Religion and Music Day.

"Before seeing that exhibit," Glasgow said, "I had not realized that every day of the week had past associated with it."

Each day is denoted with an embroidered hand towel and antique tools, machines and instruments to match each theme. From irons to sewing machines, to rug beaters and music boxes, this exhibit steps through the days of the week and the decades with items ranging from 1855 to 1950.

"History isn't just presidents and battles," said museum assistant Matt McDonough. "The way of life, which is what [the museum] chronicles, is just as important as all that stuff. To prepare for the future, you have to know the past."

The Riley County Historical Museum is open 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday-Friday, and 2 to 5 p.m. Saturdays and Sundays.

dollars for four weeks, morning only, for 2-3 hours — that's a lot of money," Pearsari said.

Board president Beth Tatarko said she supports an option that considers four school buildings rather than six or more buildings.

"I think we'd get better efficiency in terms of how many children are with the teacher," she said. "I think if we're in fewer buildings, we make better use of our resources."

Board members first voted on the original option presented at the Jan. 23 meeting. Based on 2007's actual financial summer school plan, the program would cost $277,146 with five Manhattan elementary schools and one Ogden elementary school in operation. The motion failed Wednesday, 3-3.

Another motion asked members to consider Projected Option One; it also failed, 3-3.

The evening's third and final motion asked for board members to consider Projected Option Two; it failed, 2-4. The elementary school summer program issue was tabled until the board's next meeting on Feb. 20.

Also in its second reading on Wednesday, USD 383's secondary-school summer program proposal passed without discussion, 6-0. The program will take place for three hours a day from June 2-27 at Anthony Middle School, Eisenhower Middle School and Manhattan High School's west campus.

According to the board's proposal, the program's focuses will include credit recovery and skill development for secondary students who failed to earn sufficient credits in core courses like math, language arts, social studies and science for promotion to the next grade level, among other aspects. The 2007 secondary summer school program took place from June 4-29, 2007, with 280 students in attendance.

In other business, USD 383 Superintendent Bob Shannon said district schools will not have to make up additional time lost Wednesday because of canceled classes. Board members had previously voted to extend the remainder of spring 2008 school days by 12 minutes each to compensate for four days of classes canceled in December.

K-State Web site attracts prospective students, wins national awards

By David Griffin Jr.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Web site has gained national attention for improvements made to reel in prospective students.

Since the upgrade last fall, there have been more than two million page views from 1.5 million different visitors. One feature is the panoramic photos of the campus and buildings. The University of Colorado is the only other Big 12 university to have panoramic photos on their Web site, said Sharon Morrow, director of University Publications.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said, "The panoramic views of the campus are really incredible, 'dig this'" he said, as he logged on to the Web site to show the panoramic photos. "The new features put a smile on my face."

The Web site also includes student stories and videos that speak directly to prospective students from a K-State student's perspective.

The Web site is not only recognized by prospective students, but it has also received recognition on a district and national level. Since 2006, K-State's Web site has received district awards ranging from a Bronze in "excellence in multimedia: single Web page" to Gold in "excellence in multimedia: Web site."

The most significant award K-State's Web site has received is the award for being the No. 1 Web site for prospective students of America in 2006. K-State received this award from the Admission Marketing Report, a publication that recognizes the best in university admissions marketing and advertising strategies.

"I've noticed as being a multicultural ambassador that our population as far as minority students has slowly increased each year and each semester," said Kyrie Graves, senior in family studies and human services and a student featured on the Web site. "So I think that new features persuading students will definitely get them here."

There is also an interactive portion that allows viewers to take campus quizzes and tours, Morrow said.

"We wanted to have more of an interactive tour that pulled together some of the other features that we already had on the Web site," she said.

This is beneficial for prospective out-of-state students and their parents who can't make a trip to campus, Morrow added.

The process of the interactive link is just beginning. All of the buildings have not yet been added, and Morrow said it is a continuing project.

"The new design and features work within lots of things we're doing to make sure that we're communicating the excitement of a K-State undergraduate experience," Bosco said.

Editor,

My name is Christine Tassin, and I own Twisted Apple Tattoo in Aggieville. Recently you published an article called "Inked," and we were included for some of the quotes and photos.

I would like your readers to know that the tattoo in the photo of the young lady with the heart on her left shoulder was not done here at Twisted Apple. I have been approached several times with that question and just want to clarify the misconception. Thank you for including us, as I loved the article. It was well done.

Anal sex column ignores health risks

Editor,

I am writing in response to the article by Matt Combes, "Pleasures of anal sex outweigh potential health risk."

I understand the right of freedom of speech, but with freedom there must be responsibility.

With that in mind, and as a future alumnus of K-State, stories like this encourage me never to donate financially to a university that does not take its responsibility seriously. I am disappointed, to say the least, that the Collegian would publish an article that promotes an activity that can have serious health risks, and the reasoning behind why students should try a potentially hazardous activity, "because it makes you feel kind of nasty and naughty."

I do not raise my concerns on a moral ground, though I feel that could be argued; my issue is simply with an article being published that promotes an activity that can cause severe health risk while saying those health risks should be overlooked because a student might find a moment of "pleasure."

PATRIOTS | New York better when it counted

kept punching right back.

The two teams battled back and forth. When it was all said and done, the Patriots lost because of their arrogant attitude. The Giants were playing for each other, while the Patriots were playing for history. They thought they were better, which they probably were. I don't doubt the Patriots had more talent. If the Patriots and Giants played 10 times, the Patriots would probably win eight games.

But in the Super Bowl, you only have one game to prove yourself, and for that one night, the Giants proved that they were the better team. Bill Belichick, Tom Brady and the rest of the New England Patriots were beaten at their own game. The better team won. Karma is a wonderful thing.

FLU | Cold, flu have different symptoms

cross-protection against the new bug too. Every year, the flu infects up to 20 percent of the population, causes the hospitalization of 200,000 people, and kills 36,000.

Vivian Nutsch, infection control coordinator at Mercy Regional Health Center, said good hand hygiene is essential. She said disposing of tissues readily, avoiding large crowds and isolating those who are sick from others especially in the classroom are essential.

Students should seek medical care if they have fevers of 102 or higher, particularly if these have persisted despite rest, taking anti-fever medications and drinking a large amount of fluids, Nutsch added.

She stressed people should know the difference between having a cold and having influenza. Symptoms for influenza are a fever of 101 degrees or higher, dry cough, sore throat, ear aches, muscle aches, fatigue, headache, extreme tiredness and a runny and or stuffy nose.

She also noted a large number of influenza patients in the emergency rooms with a variety of viral symptoms similar to those seen at Lafene.

The large number of students on campus who are sick is apparent to many campus workers. Melanie Vilcot, coordinator for K-State's Cat's Den convenience stores, said students have been cleaning out the cold medicine section of the merchandise.

"It is definitely more than usual," she said.

New cold medicine came in earlier this week, and by Wednesday, the shelves were bare again, Vilcot said.

"Cough drops are flying off the shelves," she said.

Collegian staff writer, Sarah Burford contributed to this report.

REDEVELOPMENT | Dial directs planning

often rent instead of build, he said, so spots are being created on the north end with that in mind.

"That is just reality," Snead said. "Our financial consultants said this is always how it goes."

Dial Realty is Manhattan's partner in the redevelopment and owns the land on the north end development area. Because of that, the city does not have much say in what kind of retailers are coming in, Hayen said.

What has disenchanted many with Dial is comparing their project in Manhattan to other developments they have participated in across the Midwest, Sherow said. He said the type of retailers included in those projects and the one in Manhattan are similar, bringing into question their ability to attract businesses the community expected.

"A lot of people in opposition to the way this has turned out have avid proponents of downtown redevelopment as a whole," Sherow said. "From their perspective, they would like to see higher quality development than what has been delivered by Dial."

Senate approves 4 new senators, allocations

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senate Chair Nick Piper swore in four new Senators Thursday night at the Student Governing Association meeting.

The new members include Jonathan Staats, junior in accounting, representing the college of business administration; Alex Delimont, senior in construction science and management, representing the college of engineering; and Maggie Waltz, sophomore in interior architecture, and Mark Andre, junior in architecture, both representing the college of architecture.

Kerri Keller, chair of the general education review committee, described a proposal to change the undergraduate education program to provide a better general education.

"The university is taking a real interest in preparing [students] as best as it can," said Keller, who is also the director of career and employment services.

She said the new general education system would build on the UGE system.

A copy of the proposal can be found at www.ksu.edu/catl. It will be brought before Student Senate in the form of legislation later in the spring. All but one item in final action passed unanimously, including the legislation to eliminate fall break and allow a weeklong break during the Thanksgiving holiday.

The allocation to the KSU Juggling Club passed with a vote of 52-0-1, and the legislation addressing an increase to the K-State Student Union operations budget fee was postponed because of an illness on the committee.

Three new allocations were on last night's agenda. The applicants included the KSU Habitat for Humanity, American Humanistic Student Association and Delta Chi Fraternity.

K-State human ecology partners with Fort Riley

By Brandon Steinert
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Fort Riley and K-State moved closer together yesterday, as officials from each institution signed an agreement to work together for the benefit of military families.

The Memorandum of Understanding is a document authorizing the extension of the College of Human Ecology to help military families deal with pre-, during and post deployment issues through research, outreach, and educational programs, said Virginia Moxley, dean of the College of Human Ecology.

One of these programs will help couples strengthen their relationships, another will teach children to cook. The list goes on to include anger management, how to deal with diabetes and a few others.

"Caring for our families is our number one priority," said Col. Richard Piscal, garrison commander at Fort Riley.

The program not only benefits Fort Riley, but also provides experience and opportunities for students in the College of Human Ecology.

"Kansas State University expressed deep interest in strengthening our relationship through the establishment of a cooperative extension for K-State's College of Human Ecology," Piscal said.

Along with their families, soldiers will receive aid in various ways. Injured soldiers can seek help from the Soldier and Family Assistance Center. SFAC tends to wounded warriors and provides a comfortable environment until they recover to either return to service or start a productive life outside the military, said Bill Powers, director of the family support center at Fort Riley.

Powers said the program will reach out to the greater Fort Riley area, including soldiers residing in Topeka, Salina and a few other towns within a 60-mile radius.

TO THE POINT

SafeRide keeps rollin' on

Every student should experience the security of riding with SafeRide at least once in their college careers. The program, started by Student Governing Association in 2001, has provided more than 100,000 students with free rides every week-end.

Last night was SafeRide's 100,000th rider. Obviously, students are taking advantage of this service.

The SafeRide program helps combat the tragedies associated with drinking and driving. Alcohol is the No. 1 killer of young adults ages 16 to 24, and most of these deaths involve vehicles.

SafeRide encourages college students to make responsible and educated decisions about their behavior before and after drinking alcohol. In addition to preventing students from drinking and driving, SafeRide increases safety by offering students a ride home. Otherwise, intoxicated or sober students would have to walk home alone at night or with a random stranger or drive home.

During these SafeRide trips, drivers have always followed abrasive and sometimes slurred directions of where students' homes are located.

Students should not be afraid of drivers' judgement. The drivers even have a few good stories from "back in the day."

Even if SafeRide becomes overwhelmed with passengers, drivers are willing to come back to the pick-up spot.

All students should use SafeRide. Since the cost of a ticket for driving under the influence is so expensive, and the act itself can be fatal, it makes sense to hitch a ride.

TO THE POINT is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Questionable convenience

Medical marijuana machines in California bring up issue of national legislation

Christina Klein | COLLEGIAN

First off, let me say I have never smoked marijuana, and neither I nor the Collegian endorse marijuana use.

As reported by MSNBC and several other news outlets last week, three marijuana vending machines have been set up in Los Angeles in natural health stores. These machines require fingerprint identification and a prepaid card to provide medical marijuana to those who have a prescription for it.

According to the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration, "In California there is no state regulation or standard of the cultivation and/or distribution of medical marijuana. California leaves the establishment of any guidelines to local jurisdictions, which can widely vary."

The DEA and U.S. government allow states to make their own laws regarding medical and recreational use and possession of marijuana. Some cities are allowing people to legally possess marijuana, even if it is for recreational use.

According to an article in USA Today, Denver passed legislation in November 2005 that allowed persons age 21 and older to have up to one ounce of marijuana within city limits without penalty. The DEA's lock-down on all drugs is getting looser and looser as some states are lightening the punishments for marijuana possession and allowing some people to have it for medical purposes.

One of government's shortcomings is its ability to admit a mistake. The U.S. government banned marijuana without any evidence to back its reasoning, as there have been minimal clinical trials throughout the last few decades completed in the United States to find out more about the drug. The federal government is still reluctant to acknowledge some recent studies that have shown benefits of marijuana — that would mean government officials would have to admit fault.

But overall, this is bigger than a group of pro-marijuana activists trying to gain the right to smoke freely. The battle over the cultural and historical meanings of marijuana is leading a debate for the prescription use of all drugs that are supposed to be used for medicinal purposes but are instead being used recreationally.

The DEA argues marijuana is a "stepping stone" to harder drugs. The U.S. Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration stated in a press release on Aug. 28, 2002, that children who use marijuana before the age of 17 are more likely to use harder drugs, but there is less chance adults will do the same.

There is one thing those on both sides of the issue agree on — marijuana is a stepping stone to harder drugs, just as tobacco and alcohol are. However, tobacco and alcohol aren't illegal. There are many more pros and cons when it comes to the issue of legalization of medicinal marijuana.

However, people will never forget the cultural connotations of marijuana, and it will probably never be completely legalized in the United States, no matter how many other countries do so.

Despite excitement surrounding Democratic race, Republican candidates offer fair share of drama

The main problem with a column that runs on Friday is you turn it in on Tuesday to make deadline. And without the results of Super Tuesday to comfort me, I had to figure out something else to write about. And like manna from heaven, I realized there seem to be two political parties in the United States.

Apparently, there is a Republican primary taking place at the same time as the Democratic one. Upon further research, I found that the race includes no fewer than three major candidates, and if my research is correct, each of them intends to actually become president. Obviously I was very surprised by this information and thought I should learn more.

Compared to a primary pitting an African-American and a woman against one another, the Republican primary must feel like the middle-child of American politics. While the Democratic race flies in the face of hundreds of years of racial prejudice and thousands of years of gender oppression, the Republicans just don't have that "wow" factor in their race. But fear not, my Republican brethren, your candidates have not sat idly by and been outdone by the she-cries-he-condescends tit-for-tat of the Democratic race. Republicans also love drama.

Before Mitt Romney dropped out of the race yesterday, he and Mike Huckabee pulled no punches in their attacks on each other. According to CNN.com, Romney hinted that Huckabee should leave the race and "quit whining." Huckabee's response was just as vicious when he said Romney was being presumptuous and arrogant. Easy, fellas, there are kids watching.

Front-runner John McCain is not above the fracas, though. According to the Associated Press, he dropped the ultimate conservative bomb, saying Romney "was against Ronald Reagan before he was for him." Talk about weapons of mass destruction. Flip-flops are not just for summer, and it appears the collective barbs from his opponents finally did Romney in.

If footage from the Republican debate at the Reagan Library is any indication, this Ron Paul fellow takes the cake. When actually allowed to speak, he said the oddest things.

On the economy, he didn't just blame the president; he also spoke of the responsibility of Congress. I checked and this little document called the Constitution actually provides Congress considerable power in this area.

Three hours later, when allowed to speak again, he criticized his colleagues for engaging in silly semantic discussion when there are real issues to discuss.

He even seems to have some grasp of the history of American foreign and economic policy. Combine that with his frequent references to the Constitution, and the eye-rolling and dismissive speech aimed at him makes for must-see TV.

So, Republicans, fear not, if you thought the frivolity that will typify the Democratic race was going to pass you by, be comforted in the knowledge that all politicians share the same desire for the inane. And we in the media will do our best to silence and ignore those who don't.

How about this for a hit or miss? KU, ESU and Washburn all canceled classes on Wednesday, and we had to drive to school in the nasty big snow.

Oh my God, we're fighting a midget.

KU made themselves more like a high school today when they decided to cancel classes over a little bit of snow.

To the guy who just stopped and told us that throwing snowballs is illegal: Your freaking relationship is illegal.

I almost completely just bit it on the ice. Thank God no one was watching.

WHO HAS YOUR VOTE?

Religion influences but does not define students' voting preferences

Who has your vote?

This is the fourth article in a five-week series examining the voting behavior of different groups within society and their effects on the 2008 presidential election. Next week, the Collegian will conclude the series by examining the electoral effects of the military nationally and locally.

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many strongly religious K-State students tend to lean toward conservative political views, but their religion does not necessarily shape their voting patterns.

Religion has played a large part in the 2008 presidential campaign, especially in the Republican race.

Of the three leading candidates in the Republican race before Thursday, one, Mitt Romney, is a Mormon and another, Mike Huckabee, is a former evangelical pastor.

According to a Gallup poll published Dec. 24, 2007, 82 percent of Americans are Christians. Of those, 51 percent identified themselves as Protestant, 23 percent as Roman Catholic and only two percent as Mormon.

Laurie Bagby, associate professor of political science, said Christians typically voted as Democrats until President Ronald Reagan's terms in the 1980s. Since then, Christians, especially evangelicals, have leaned toward the Republican, conservative points of view.

Hank Warkentin, senior in computer science, said he would be pleased with two of those candidates, but would not support Romney, the former governor of Massachusetts, or any of the Democratic candidates. He said Romney's Mormon beliefs did not fall in line with his.

"It makes a big difference that he's a Mormon," Warkentin said. "He sees the world a whole lot different than I do."

Michael Wangsgaard, local dentist and leader of the Manhattan student branch of the Church of Latter Day Saints, said Romney's Mormon beliefs should not turn away evangelical or other Christian voters. He said both groups of people have similar goals and should work together.

"I have always hoped and dreamed that conservatives and Mormons would come together to solve these important issues of our time and look past our minor religious differences," he said.

Wangsgaard said Mormon beliefs mostly correlate with those of conservatives, especially their views on moral issues like abortion.

Warkentin said abortion was an important issue for him as well. He said he does not support abortion rights because of his Christian views. This is also true with other moral issues, he said.

"I believe conservative views relate more closely to religious views than those of liberal views," Warkentin said.

Jacob Huff, junior in business management and treasurer for the K-State College Republicans, said his Christian beliefs do not define his political views.

"I would say I want somebody with Christian values [for president], but not necessarily Christian," Huff said.

Huff, a Romney supporter, said he was more concerned about issues like the economy and war in Iraq than moral issues like abortion. He also said Romney's Mormon beliefs should not set him apart from other Republicans.

"If you look at just the Christian aspect, Jimmy Carter was one of the strongest Christian presidents, and in my opinion, he was a terrible president," Huff said.

In a Pew Research Center survey on Dec. 4, 2007, almost a fourth of those polled said they would not vote for a Mormon candidate, and 62 percent thought Mormonism was "very different" from their religion.

Bagby said Romney's Mormon beliefs were not necessarily a hindrance for his campaign.

"People support him simply because he is a Christian of conviction," she said. "He says, 'I'm a Mormon,' and he doesn't hide from it."

Huff said he was concerned that many of the Christians on campus were apathetic toward politics.

He said he thought many Christians were afraid to address government issues for fear of taking over the government or vice versa.

"To them, obviously God comes first and country comes second," he said.

On Tuesday, Arizona Sen. John McCain wrapped up many of the Republican delegates and is predicted by many to win the presidential nomination. Bagby said though many conservative voices like radio host Rush Limbaugh have attacked McCain, he is still showing strong support among conservative Christians.

"It seems that conservatives aren't listening to that because he would need a large amount of support from conservatives to win the nomination," Bagby said.

Huff said he did not know if he would support McCain because he did not have a strong conservative record.

Asked if he would vote for McCain, Huff said, "It depends on who the Democratic candidate is. And a lot depends on who he chooses as vice president."

BLACK HISTORY ON CAMPUS

Associate dean starts program, helps students overcome prejudices

By Jasmine Hammond
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This is the first of a four-week profile series highlighting contributions made by African-American faculty on the K-State campus in light of February: National Black History Month.

K-State's Carla Jones has lurked in the shadows of students' lives, giving them guidance and a listening ear for several years.

"I don't do it for glory. I do it for service," said Jones, senior associate dean of student life.

Jones is heavily involved on campus but in a discreet way: by helping others.

In her position, she is primarily responsible for helping students adjust to K-State.

She talks with students about a wide range of topics, from family issues to academic and financial problems and relationship break-ups.

"I try to get students to the right resources," Jones said.

Heather Reed, assistant dean of student life, said Jones is knowledgeable with student issues and works well with students.

"Carla is a lot of fun to work with," Reed said. "She's a good student advocate who is welcoming to all students."

Being an African-American and a woman, Jones had to overcome many obstacles.

"Every week it was always something," Jones said. "One day it would be I was black, the next would be because I'm a woman and sometimes it would be both."

Eventually Jones said she received the respect she needed and deserved.

"We [African-Americans] have to get more education than most people," Jones said. "I had to work hard, very hard, and learn my craft to get all the credentials to be where I am today."

Jones, a Florida native, received a bachelor of arts degree at Jacksonville University in Jacksonville, Fla. She also received degrees from Florida State University, University of Texas at Austin and earned her doctorate from the University of Florida.

"I was a fairly good student," Jones said.

She started at K-State 14 years ago as an adjunct instructor teaching leadership development courses and worked her way up to where she is today.

Jones has also served as an adviser for Silver Key Sophomore Honorary, an organization for second-year college students who earn a 3.0 GPA and are selected for membership on the basis of leadership.

Jones said she felt her biggest accomplishment at K-State was starting the Multicultural Student Honor Society, which began in November 1999.

This society is open to sophomores who have taken 45 hours or more and maintained a 3.0 GPA.

"I worked very diligently with her when she put together that group," said Pat Hudgins, classified advertisement adviser and human relations specialist for Student Publications, Inc.

Hudgins described Jones as a quiet cheerleader, recruiter, mentor, and someone who gives students plenty of meaningful advice.

Carla Jones, senior associate dean of student life, said her biggest accomplishment was starting the Multicultural Student Honor Society.

"She supports people who don't even know that she is supporting them," Hudgins said.

Tennis team aims for balance

By Tyler Sharp
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team is still trying to find the best line-up balance to carry it through the remainder of the season entering into its Saturday afternoon match against the St. Louis Billikens at Ahearn Field House.

KLIMOVA

Coach Steve Bietau said he was satisfied with a majority of the line-up, but he still needed to make changes.

"We definitely want to look at getting Olga [Klimova] into the singles line-up," he said. "I think she's ready to go. We're pretty set with the No. 1 doubles team, they've played a lot together."

We feel like we have a good competitive team and the other two teams are pretty much still up in the air. So I think the key is there is finding the combinations that give us the best three teams. So line-up wise that's what we're looking at right now."

Klimova, a senior, and junior Katerina Kudlackova have posted a 2-2 record this season, are 15-13 together over two seasons and will likely remain the No. 1 doubles team.

A variety of other line-ups have filled the Wildcats' scorecard and one of the most recent successes are freshmen Antea Huljev and Vanessa Cottin. The duo scored an 8-2 win in the No. 3 spot against Syracuse, the first time the two had played together.

Senior Viviana Yrureta said doubles performance has been a focus during practice this week.

"We've been practicing the most on doubles because they seem pretty important right now," she said. "It's pretty big when it gives us the doubles point, but we've been also working a lot on our singles. Right now, we've also been doing a lot of conditioning; we're focused on getting stronger and getting in shape. Everyone's working really hard."

In singles play, Yrureta was victorious in the No. 1 spot against Syracuse and boosted her singles record to 7-6. Cottin, Kudlackova and sophomore Natasha Vieira also posted wins. The singles win was Cottin's first at K-State.

The Billikens, who are fresh off a loss to Missouri, mounted a strong challenge toward claiming the doubles point in last Saturday's match. Senior Rachel McCullagh and freshman Casey Miller took the Tigers' Kaitlin Dunham and Kaitlyn Ritchie to the wire, before eventually losing 8-5. Freshman Hailee Elmore and junior Joe Becker in the No. 3 spot were victorious.

Bietau said improvement is paramount as the Wildcats head toward Big 12 play and a big rematch against Wichita State.

"We have to see improvement," he said. "Our players have to understand that they have to improve from match to match if we are going to have a successful year."

Fightin' back

K-State, KU 'Think Pink' this weekend

By Joel Jellison
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When K-State and KU play Saturday, it will be about more than a rivalry.

The game will focus on fighting for a cure to a disease that affects thousands of women every year.

The first 6,000 fans at the women's basketball game, which will tip at 1 p.m. at Bramlage Coliseum, will receive free "Think Pink" T-shirts. The shirts are part of a campaign to raise awareness for breast cancer by the Kay Yow and Women's Basketball Coaches Association Cancer Fund.

It won't just be the fans who will be wearing pink, as both teams will sport the color in different ways. No. 18 K-State will wear pink shoelaces and the coaching staff will wear pink shirts, while KU will wear pink uniforms just for one game. K-State coach Deb Patterson said it's important to raise awareness for cancer as a whole because it affects everyone.

"It's just an enormously significant and important cause," she said. "I think there's no one that we know that in some shape or form hasn't been touched by cancer in their family or with their friends, and we all know the magnitude of this disease. And for women's basketball to be able to bring this kind of attention to this cause and to the

Knight's resignation not surprising

The college basketball world shook earlier this week when heralded coach Bob Knight, fresh off victory No. 902, announced he was retiring immediately.

Speculation was running rampant. Was he ill? Was a member of his family ill?

Was there a scandal? Did he just want to seal his son's legacy as the new head coach at Texas Tech?

But, no, Knight just said he was tired. He had lost his passion. His mojo. He no longer wanted to do what he had been doing for 40 years.

Anyone who watched a recent Texas Tech game could tell that Knight was worn out. After his team topped Texas A&M at home, he just slumped over in his chair on the court afterward, looking like he might be dying.

Tired? I completely buy it. If I had a dollar for every time one of my parents, who are just slightly younger than Knight, said they were tired and wanted to quit their jobs, I wouldn't have to get student loans to pay for college.

But for what should Knight be remembered? While 902 wins is a big feat, in fact, the most wins in Division I men's college basketball history, and he should be remembered for his three NCAA championships, his Big Ten championships, being National Coach of the Year and the coach of the U.S. Olympic Basketball team when they won a gold medal, the skeletons in his closet complete his legacy.

Which incident was more controversial? The time he threw a chair during a game after a referee made a call he wasn't fond of? The multiple times he swore on-the-record during press conferences? The most recent incident that comes to mind was when a neighbor recorded himself going up to Knight and a friend, who were dove hunting, and berating them for shooting too close to his house.

While these incidents no doubt tarnished Knight's image with the media, they shouldn't overshadow what Bob Knight was: a great coach. You don't win that many national championships without knowing a thing or two about basketball and how to win. His antics were just part of what made Bob Knight, Bob Knight.

Would we have really paid the same amount of attention to him if he hadn't been the angry coach we all know and love? His legacy in the sport of basketball will feature both his wins and his controversies.

It's all a matter of perspective. I know many aren't going to agree that Knight deserves the respect I am willing to give him, but Knight is a figure who commands that respect. He will go down in history one way or another; that's inevitable. But he should go down in a blaze of glory, not under the shadow of controversy.

K-State to face struggling Oklahoma State team Saturday

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Oklahoma State finally tallied its first conference win since its conference opener Wednesday and is looking to climb out of the basement of the Big 12 Conference rankings. First, though, they'll have to get past K-State at 5 p.m. Saturday in Bramlage Coliseum.

K-State (16-5, 6-1 Big 12) is coming off a decisive 74-59 victory over Nebraska Wednesday and will be looking to preserve its No. 20 ranking.

It is unknown whether the Wildcats will have the services of senior guard Clint Stewart, whose mother passed away Tuesday, will decide following Vanessa Stewart's 9 a.m. memorial service Saturday in Norman, Okla., whether or not he will suit up for the contest.

"We're going to have to play for our teammate who's missing," said senior guard Blake Young. "We have to play for him and his family. We need to bring some excitement to the table for him."

K-State will also still be without junior forward Andre Gilbert, who was suspended indefinitely for an undisclosed violation of team rules prior to the game against KU on Jan. 30.

The Cowboys (11-11, 2-6 Big 12) are led in scoring by freshman guard James Anderson, who is scoring almost 15 points per game. Junior guard Terrel Harris, is also averaging 10 points per contest. Oklahoma State's leading rebounder is senior guard Marcus Dove, who is pulling down six boards per game.

"Mostly their game is perimeter-oriented, so our guards are going to have to really guard the ball," said junior forward Darren Kent. "They shoot it pretty well, so it's going to be tough because their guys are very versatile."

K-State's leading scorer and rebounder is well-known by now to Wildcat fans. Freshman forward Michael Beasley is averaging a conference-high 25 points per game and pulling down 12 rebounds per game. Freshman forward Bill Walker isn't far behind, averaging almost 16 points and seven boards per contest.

Sophomore guard Chris Merriewether leaps for one of his five rebounds against Nebraska. K-State will be host to Oklahoma State 5 p.m. Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

Joslyn Brown COLLEGIAN

K-State is leading the conference in rebounds per game, with an average of 42.

Kent said having players like Beasley and Walker on the team is also an advantage defensively for the Wildcats.

"It helps in practice when they have to guard Bill, Mike and myself," he said. "It's not going to be that difficult of a transition since they do it every day in practice, so hopefully it'll be an advantage that we can carry over in the game."

BASKETBALL NEWS AND NOTES

Beasley to be on 'Big 12 Showcase'

This week's "Big 12 Showcase" on FSN will bring to the spotlight a player who needs no introduction in K-State land.

Freshman forward Michael Beasley is leading the Wildcats to a share of the lead in the Big 12 standings. He's the Big 12's leading scorer, and the nation's leading rebounder.

Showcase host Emily Jones visits one-on-one with the Wildcat phenom, getting his thoughts on the K-State season and even on his fascination with Sponge Bob Squarepants. Beasley's little sister Tiffany even makes an appearance, in between her own autograph session with Wildcat fans.

Lehning 'making the buzz'; named to 3rd-team All-District academic team

K-State's junior guard Shalee Lehning is gaining accolades for what she has done off the court as well as on the court this season.

She was selected to the CoSIDA/Academic All-District seven third-team Thursday. This is the first time Lehning has been honored in this district.

To be nominated, a student-athlete must be a starter or important reserve and attain at least a 3.2 cumulative grade point average on a 4.0

scale for the duration of their career.

Lehning holds a 3.72 GPA in broadcast journalism and was named earlier this year to the Fall 2007 Big 12 Commissioner's Honor Roll. She had a 4.0 GPA during the fall semester.

She has also received the Nancy Lieberman Award for being the player in 2008 who has been "making the buzz." This award, presented by the Rotary Club of Detroit, is given annually to the top women's collegiate point guard.

Lieberman is the only athlete to receive the Wade Trophy twice and was inducted into the Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame.

Lehning is averaging 10.4 points per game, as well as seven rebounds and six assists. She leads the Big 12 in assists and is ninth in the nation. Her assist to turnover ratio is 1.9, which is second in the Big 12. She also leads the assist leaders in the nation in rebounds per game.

JUST A NOTE

Live bands retain advantage

An in-sync adrenaline rush occurs for musicians and audience members when that first guitar string is plucked and that first word is sung into a microphone.

But if these artists are missing in action on the performance circuit and hide behind computer screens, how can their adoring fans put their hands in the air and scream for them?

In a technologically savvy 21st century, some musical artists have bypassed live performances and six-month tours. Instead, their songs are pasted on networking Web sites like MySpace.com while they continue to play small tours and keep their fingers crossed for continued support.

While Web sites provide unlimited potential for viewers' access, a song clip and artist biography lack the audience-interaction element.

Bands like Panic At the Disco completely missed the nail on its head. In 2005, while the young band was in its beginning stages, Panic members contacted Fall Out Boy bassist Pete Wentz through LiveJournal.com and sent him a link to Panic's PureVolume.com site.

From there, Wentz met the band members in person, heard them perform live in a garage and asked if they would sign with the record label Decaydance/Fueled by Ramen.

A more recent example is seen with break-through musical artist Ingrid Michaelson. Michaelson, a Staten Island, N.Y., resident posted several original songs on her MySpace account in 2006 to share her music and possibly score local shows, according to an Oct. 13, 2007, Billboard magazine article. But within a matter of months, a music manager discovered Michaelson's site and her music has since appeared on "Grey's Anatomy" and in Old Navy advertisements.

Live musicians also can use live performances to help build their social networks. Most tours take artists across the country, where they are exposed to different audiences.

Kevin Sinclair, publisher and editor of www.MusicianHome.com, claims musicians only can achieve true success through "getting out there" and informing public members about their music. At Artistopia Music, an independent music blog, Sinclair said audience participation is a key element for successful live performances.

Live music provides artists with filled tour diaries, photo albums and a new fan base, so they shouldn't completely disregard Internet possibilities. MySpace.com had its first MySpace Music Tour with 30 shows in October and November 2007 across the U.S. Tours like MySpace's provide fans the opportunities they've waited for to hear bands who wouldn't otherwise visit their area.

Laurie Anderson, an American performance artist and musician, once said, "Performance art is about joy, about making something that's so full of kind of a wild joy that you really can't put into words."

Performance incorporates audiences, notes, lyrics, gestures and most importantly—emotion. No matter how much technology evolves, a computer screen and sound bytes never could encapsulate live music.

Lingerie offers sexy alternative gift idea

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are some items that are easy to purchase and require no sweat or anxious nail biting. Groceries, for example, carry no real psychological weight. However, when one starts venturing into the world of holiday shopping, it becomes riskier.

Not the end-of-the-year holidays, mind you, those appetites can be satisfied with a simple fruit basket or ugly sweater. No, one of the most difficult holidays to shop for is Valentine's Day, especially for men.

Women place a lot of emphasis on this romantic holiday, and men who realize this might stress about what to get their special lady come Feb. 14. Many turn to chocolate or flowers, but some men who want to turn their relationship up a couple notches go for a sexier route: lingerie.

Whether you buy your lady friend something lacy, frilly, see-through or all of the above can depend on many factors, like how long you've been dating, how close your relationship is and what kind of woman she is. It is also important to do a little detective work to find out her size and favorite styles and colors.

Literature like "The North American Field Guide to Lingerie" can help a guy who is not-so knowledgeable about the different types of under-things available for women today. It contains a go-to guide about different forms of panties, bras, teddies and anything else an adventurous guy can dream up, complete with suggestions about what type of girl would look best in it.

Once you have a good idea about what you're looking for, the next step is venturing out to purchase it. And don't worry, boys, you're not alone.

"During holidays like Valentine's Day, about one out of five of people that come in are men," said

Shea Olsen, Victoria's Secret employee. "Many of them are sent with a list, so they know what they're looking for, or they come in with the lady, and do it as a couple. Some just have no idea, and that's why we're here."

Olsen said some of the men are nervous and feel out of their element, but others breeze through it with no problems. She added that picking out a certain type of lingerie can depend on the girl, which is why they offer a wish list.

The woman can go into Victoria's Secret, fill out a wish list with their sizes and what they want, and give it to their man, who can use that to guide them in their shopping. However, it isn't just men shopping for their significant others that venture in.

"We also have guys come in to buy sleep wear or other items from our Pink collection for sisters or moms," Olsen said. "Fragrance is also an idea if you just can't decide. We have a lot of fun with the guys because we get to know them."

Men who have previously bought items for the women in their life can offer assistance on how to handle the experience.

"I bought my ex-girlfriend underwear while we were dating," said Brian Lauer, junior in agricultural technology management. "We'd been dating for about a year, and I remember thinking they were really expensive."

Lauer said his girlfriend went in with him and picked out what she wanted, making the experience easier for him. He would do it again, he added, as it was not too embarrassing.

"It wasn't for a holiday or anything, though. I guess I'm just a nice guy," Lauer said.

While men like Lauer can check buying lingerie off their life accomplishments, others are waiting for the right lady to go down that road.

"I haven't bought lingerie for a girl, but I probably would," said Cory Saunders, sophomore in kinesiology. "But I would have to be in a serious or long-term relationship with her before I would."

Saunders said the items he would consider purchasing would be garter belts or stockings. However, he said he would want to bring a friend along with him to calm his nerves.

"I would bring a girl friend though, because I think going in with a guy friend would look weird," Saunders said. "I would be anxious to go in a store like that, but not really scared. I would just want to get in and get out."

Panties or other forms of lingerie are perfect for Valentine's Day gifts. Most stores offer different styles, cuts and colors for the special lady.

MOVIE REVIEW

'Sunshine' takes new approach to apocalyptic thriller

"Sunshine"

★★★★☆

Review by Brendan Praeger

Judging a book by its cover can be a mistake, but judging a movie by its trailer is usually more accurate.

After researching last week's theatrical offerings, "The Eye" and "Over Her Dead Body," I decided my time would be better spent looking at a recent DVD release that never came to Manhattan.

My morbid narrative taste has fueled my interest in apocalyptic thrillers for as long as I can remember. It doesn't matter if humanity has already fallen, or if the end is simply hanging overhead, the apocalypse provides enough psychological and philosophical tension to power even the most flaccid of narratives.

Director Danny Boyle created a masterpiece of apocalyptic cinema with the terrifying "28 Days Later." With "Sunshine," he dropped the infected zombies in favor of an impending solar disaster.

Fifty years in the future, the sun is being destroyed from inside by a highly stable form of matter that renders nuclear fusion impossible, by turning common matter on its own kind.

The only hope is to send a team of astronauts to detonate a massive, highly energetic bomb that will be able to destroy this strange matter and restore the sun's natural state.

Seven years after the first ship, Icarus 1, disappeared, Icarus 2 becomes the planet's last hope for survival.

After passing Mercury, the crew finds a distress signal from Icarus 1 and decides to rendezvous with the abandoned ship. Murphy's Law takes effect, and a series of mistakes put the mission in jeopardy.

On the surface, "Sunshine" is little more than a thematic replica of "Deep Impact" or "The Core" with settings stolen from "Event Horizon." Our planet is in trouble. Send in the cavalry.

However, "Sunshine" avoids numerous disaster movie clichés by showing the crew in relative isolation. We don't see any shots from Earth until the end of the film. Boyle reduces the first act, typically a montage of panic and desperation by the helpless population, to an expository monologue.

As the crew fights to retain sanity, certain members have to sacrifice their own lives to save the mission.

The relationships between the crew members become the primary focus of the film, helping to avoid the linear narrative of most disaster movies.

Unlike "Armageddon" or "Deep Impact," the crew members of Icarus 2 know they will probably die, so sacrificing one life for the good of humanity isn't a twist, it's a strategic move.

The creative liberty taken with scientific theories will bother some viewers, although a DVD commentary by Dr. Brian Cox of the University of Manchester will address their concerns.

Those who can briefly suspend their disbelief will be in for a treat. "Sunshine" displays the tight direction and appropriate casting choices of Boyle's other films with a dash of "2001: A Space Odyssey" thrown in for good measure.

DVD extras include two commentaries and multiple deleted scenes.

KIRSTEN DUNST CHECKS INTO REHAB

Kirsten Dunst has checked into rehab, a source close to the actress has confirmed to People magazine.

Dunst, 25, has reportedly checked herself into the Cirque Lodge in Utah—the same facility Lindsay Lohan entered back in August.

When contacted by Access Hollywood, a representative for the actress was not immediately available for comment.

Well known as Mary Jane from the "Spider-Man" franchise, Dunst's other film credits include "Mona Lisa Smile," "Bring It On," and "The Virgin Suicides."

And just as Kirsten has checked in, fellow actress Eva Mendes has checked out of the Cirque Lodge, although it appears her leave is only temporary.

MENDES TEMPORARILY CHECKS OUT OF REHAB

Eva Mendes has checked herself out of rehab, although it appears to be only temporary, Access Hollywood has learned.

"Eva is attending to some personal business in Los Angeles and intends to return to complete her treatment shortly," her representative told Access.

Last week, the actress revealed she had been at the Cirque Lodge in Utah for several weeks.

"Eva has been working hard for the past year and made a positive decision to take some much-needed time off to proactively attend to some personal issues that, while not critical, she felt deserved some outside professional support. Out of respect for Eva's privacy, we do not wish to discuss further details," Mendes' representative told Access at the time.

The Cirque Lodge is the same facility Lindsay Lohan checked into back in August.

Winehouse

AMY WINEHOUSE DENIED VISA; WON'T PERFORM AT GRAMMYS

Amy Winehouse will not be performing at this year's Grammy Awards because her request for a visa has been turned down by the U.S. Embassy, her publicist said Thursday.

"Amy has been progressing well since entering a rehabilitation clinic two weeks ago and, although disappointed with the decision, has accepted the ruling and will be concentrating on her recovery," The Outside Organization, which counts the troubled retro-soul sensation among its clients, said in a statement.

Winehouse shot to fame with the autobiographical single "Rehab."

The 24-year-old singer and her acclaimed "Back to Black" album are nominated in six categories for at the Grammy Awards in Los Angeles on Sunday. Her potent blend of blues, jazz, pop and soul has won praise from critics and fans, but Winehouse has become as famous for her chaotic personal life as for her music.

Since the album's U.S. release last year, she has canceled a slew of appearances amid reports of drug use. Her husband, Blake Fielder-Civil, is in jail awaiting trial on charges of assault and lying to police.

FRIDAY FACTOID

Majority of buildings named after faculty

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

How are all the buildings on campus named?

Most campus buildings are named after K-State administrators and other faculty. Nine out of the 11 presidents before President Jon Wefald have buildings named for them (Thomas Will, president in the 1890s and Wefald's predecessor Duane Acker were not included). According to a letter from former university archivist Jerry Carter, they do not have buildings named after them because the university faced a time of regression during their presidential terms.

Several buildings on campus are named after large donors to the university or departments in their respective buildings. K-State does not have nearly as many buildings named after donors as most other campuses.

According to a Manhattan Mercury article from August 2002, universities in New England started the trend of dedicating buildings to donors, but K-State did not follow the trend because much of its funding came from the state or federal government.

Eventually, K-State needed extra funds for building expansions and started naming buildings and expansions for donors. K-State still names buildings after faculty, though, including Snyder Family Stadium in honor of former football coach Bill Snyder.

PROMINENT BUILDINGS NAMED AFTER FACULTY, ADMINISTRATION:

Anderson Hall: named after the second president of the university, John Anderson (1873-1879).

Cardwell Hall: named after the former head of the physics department and associate dean of arts and sciences, A.B. Cardwell. He took a leave of absence during World War II to do research, which was later determined to be uranium development for atomic bombs.

Eisenhower Hall: named after the ninth K-State president and younger brother of President Dwight D. Eisenhower, Milton Eisenhower. He was the only K-State president who graduated from K-State.

Lafene Health Center: named after Dr. Benjamin Lafene, college physician and director of the old Student Health Center, which was located where the English and Counseling Services building is now.

PROMINENT BUILDINGS NAMED AFTER DONORS:

Dole Hall: named after former U.S. Sen. Bob Dole

Hale Library: named after Joe and Joyce Hale, a local couple who donated $5 million to the construction of Hale Library.

Bramlage Coliseum: named after Fred Bramlage, a Junction City businessman who helped raise funds for the coliseum construction, route Interstate 70 through Kansas and bring the Army's First Infantry Division to Fort Riley.

Administrator says she loves students, her role

By Adrienne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Heather Reed entered her office in Holton 102, her smile spread across her entire face and even those who didn't know her personally could feel an instant connection.

On a Thursday morning after the K-State men's basketball victory 24 years in the making, a steady snow fell across campus. Most students and faculty members opted to stay indoors, but Reed went from building to building and meeting to meeting with faculty members and students.

She is a student advocate who "absolutely loves" her job.

Every day at work is different for Reed, assistant dean of student life. Students seek her out for assistance and guidance with different problems related to academic concerns, work lives and personal issues.

Depression and anxiety are common issues among students who Reed encounters, she said. Reed connects students with University Counseling Services and discusses their needs with their instructors, but only if they request so.

"Ultimately, every student that walks in here with a problem, we want to try to problem solve and get them through it and on to being a successful student," she said.

Reed has served as assistant dean of student life since 2005, and she works closely with Carla Jones, associate dean of student life; and Pat Bosco, dean of student life, to help meet students' needs.

A "caring aura," which surrounds K-State and its students, makes Reed's job enjoyable, she said. Personal growth among students also makes her role worthwhile.

"They're a breath of fresh air to work with," Reed said. "I've seen so many students go on and be successful when they've had huge struggles and they've worked through them. They've used their resources, and I think they've come out on the other side even as a stronger person."

Reed is an adjunct professor in Leadership Studies and Programs, but she also is a counselor. As she decided on a master's degree program, Reed said she chose one where she could serve as a problem-solver.

"In my previous role as a teacher, I found students seemed to want to confide in me," she said. "They saw me as a person who was empathetic and could help them find ways to solve their problems."

Last spring presented a challenge and subsequent evaluation for university educators across the U.S., including Reed.

In April 2007, the Virginia Tech massacre made Reed and her colleagues evaluate K-State's Office of Student Life and its preparedness. After they reviewed the Virginia Tech Review Panel's report, Reed said the Office of Student Life concluded that K-State had resources in place if a similar event had occurred.

Reed serves as chairwoman of K-State's Crisis Management Committee and adviser to the Student Judicial Program. But at the end of the day, she also is a wife, mother and grandmother.

Reed and her husband of 30 years, Mike, own Manhattan's Prime Time Fitness Club. They have two adult daughters and a grandson.

When she's away from the office, Reed said she enjoys running. Reed has completed a couple of half-marathon runs, which she considers a significant accomplishment.

"When I look back, it's pretty incredible considering I never considered myself a runner, but I do enjoy that type of exercise," Reed said.

Each day presents itself with new challenges in the Office of Student Life, but 10 years from now, Reed said she would like to remain in her current role.

"Sure, we all have goals, but this is just such a perfect fit for me that it really is a joy to come to work every day."

Finger-style guitarist to perform tonight at the MAC

By Willow Williamson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The rhythmic strums of a finger-style guitarist will be heard tonight when Michael Young gives the first performance of the 2008 Birdhouse season at 8 p.m. in the Manhattan Arts Center.

Young, who plays both the six- and 12-string guitar, has a "bouncy and energetic groove" in his music, according to his Web site, michaelyoungmusic.com.

Robbie Bear, who is in charge of bookings for the MAC's Birdhouse series and a biology instructor at K-State, said he first heard about Young from a friend, who called him a phenomenal guitarist. Bear said he listened to Young's albums but truly understood his talent when he watched some of Young's performances on YouTube.com.

"He's very energetic and engaged with his instrument and the audience," Bear said.

Bear said he kept his eye on Young, and when his representative contacted Bear last fall about a performance, he jumped at the chance to book Young for the spring Birdhouse series.

"I always look for up and coming artists that have something completely new and unique," Bear said.

Young is the first musician to play for this season's Birdhouse series, which features four performances each semester, according to the MAC Web site, www.manhattanarts.org. The series promotes artists who perform in the styles of jazz, blues, folk and country. Tess Purvis, director of marketing and education at the MAC, said the series brings in "bar music" like one might hear in the pubs of Ireland or England.

Purvis said the performances at the MAC are a great way for students to spend an evening because the location is within walking distance of campus and Aggieville, and it's a casual affair.

"We are not stuffy, so jeans and T-shirts are absolutely fine," she said.

Bear said he hopes people will come to the show. He said it is a great opportunity that is not taken advantage of enough.

"Our audience has been kind of falling off and it's kind of a shame to lose something as good as we have at the Birdhouse, and I hope that college students will begin to see what a little nugget they have available to them," Bear said.

He said he is excited to see Young perform live, because Young is sure to go far in his career.

"I really think he is just a fantastic young musician who is going to surprise a lot of people in the future," he said.

The box office opens at 7:30 for the 8 p.m. show, Purvis said, and tickets are $13 for students, $14 for military and $16 for adults. People can reserve tickets by calling 785-537-4420, going online or just by getting them at the door, Purvis said. Also, the art exhibit "A Golden Day," which features photography by Judith Lennox Sabatini, will be open before the show.
